

School of Law at Northwestern University during the 1993-94 academic year.

Susan Scarrow, assistant professor of political science, University of Houston, is a Conant Post-Doctoral Fellow in the Program for the Study of Germany and Europe at the Center for European Studies, Harvard University, during the 1993-94 academic year.

Gustavo Vega-Canovas, associate professor of El Colegio de Mexico, will be visiting the department of political science, Yale University, 1993-94.

Meredith M. Watts, professor, University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee, at University of Siegen, Germany.

Quansheng Zhao of Old Dominion University will be a Pacific Basin Research Fellow at the Kennedy School of Government, Harvard University, for the 1993-94 academic year. He will also be an associate professor of international politics (adjunct) at the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy, Tufts University.

Retirements

Ibrahim Abu-Lughod, professor, department of political science, Northwestern University.

Bertil L. Hanson, professor of political science, Oklahoma State University. Professor Hanson will teach at the University of Umea, Sweden, 1993-94.

Donald Strickland, professor, department of political science, Northwestern University.

Award Recipients

American Council of Learned Societies

The American Council of Learned Societies (ACLS) is pleased to announce the results of programs in Eastern European Studies which are sponsored jointly by the ACLS and the Social Science Research Council. Awards were made for research and advanced training in the social sciences and the humanities pertaining to Albania, Bulgaria, the Czech Republic, the eastern part of Germany, Hungary, Poland, Romania, Slovakia, and the successor states of Yugoslavia. Predissertation travel grants and grants for training in Eastern European languages were also awarded. Political scientists who won awards are listed below.

Postdoctoral Fellowships

Ellen T. Comisso, professor of political science, University of California, San Diego. Legislating justice: the compensation act and privatization in Hungary.

David Ost, assistant professor of political science, Hobart and William Smith Colleges. Socio-political consequences of economic transformation in heavy industrial regions of post-Communist Poland.

Dorothy J. Rosenberg, visiting assistant professor of women's studies, Mount Holyoke College. Women in transition in Eastern Germany and Central Eastern Europe.

Joseph Rothschild, professor of political science, Columbia University. The political history of post-Communist East Central Europe since the rejection and collapse of Communism in 1989.

Fellowships for Research and Writing of Dissertations

Shari J. Cohen, Ph.D. candidate, department of political science, University of California, Berkeley. The legacy of two totalitarianisms in post-communist struggles over national identity.

Gerald A. McDermott, Ph.D. candidate, department of political science, Massachusetts Institute of Technology. The reformulation of property rights and the reconstruction of firms in the Czech and Slovak Republics.

Fellowships for Advanced Graduate Study and Training

Fellowships were awarded to two graduate students in political science preparing to write dissertations on Eastern Europe:

Tamar Gutner, graduate student, department of political science, Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Coursework in East European politics, economic growth and environmental management; language training in Czech.

Mitchell A. Orenstein, graduate student, department of political science, Yale University. Coursework in history, economics, sociology and political anthropology of Eastern Europe; language training in Czech, Polish.

Predissertation Travel Grants

Eniko Z. Csargo, graduate student, department of political science, George Washington University.

Chinese Studies

Yasheng Huang, assistant professor of political science, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor. The politics of inflation control in China during reform era: provincial responses and investment behavior, 1977-1991.

Dorothy J. Solinger, professor of Chinese politics, University of California, Irvine. China's urban transients and the collapse of the Communist social order.

Martha F. Chang, graduate student, department of government, Harvard University. An Easement Pacifica: Sino-Japanese relations and the politics of regional cooperation.

Deutscher Akademischer Austauschdienst (DAAD)/ACLS German-American Collaborative Research Grants in the Humanities and Social Sciences

These grants support cooperative research in the humanities and social sciences between German and American scholars by providing opportunities for sustained work in each other's countries.

A list of the American political science project leaders, with their German partners and projects, follows.

Charles F. Doran, professor of international relations, Johns Hopkins University, for research with Gustav Schmidt, professor of international politics, Ruhr University, Bochum. Germany and Japan as factors in U.S. global strategy: assessing future world order.

Grzegorz Ekiert, assistant professor of government, Harvard University, for research with Rene Ahlberg, professor of political science, Osteuropa Institut, Free University of Berlin. Strategies of collective protest in democratizing societies: Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Poland, and the former East Germany, 1989-1992.

Patricia K. Grimsted, fellow in Russian/Ukrainian studies, Harvard University, for research with Wolfgang Eichwede, professor of East European studies, University of Bremen. The fate of archives, libraries, and museums on the Eastern Front during World War II.

Horst Mewes, associate professor of political science, University of Colorado, Boulder, for research with Juergen Hebbardt, professor of political science, University of Erlangen/Nurnberg. Civil government and civil society: a comparative analysis of recent German and American theories of democracy.

Antonio Rios-Bustamante, assistant professor of Mexican American studies, University of Arizona, for research with Volker Albrecht, professor of educational geography, University of Frankfurt. The Atlas of Mexican American History.

ACLS Fellowships/Grants-in-Aid

A list of the political science recipients with affiliation and research project follows.

James B. Murphy, assistant professor of government, Dartmouth College. Natural law and the laws of nature.

Joseph M. Schwartz, assistant professor of political science, Temple University. Rebuilding social solidarity: democracy and the welfare state.

Social Science Research Council

The Social Science Research Council is pleased to announce the results of fellowship programs which are sponsored jointly by SSRC and the American Council of Learned Societies.

AFRICA

Predissertation Fellowships

Andrew L. Helling, Ph.D. candidate in public policy, Indiana University, for travel to Angola for preliminary research on local institutional development.

International Doctoral Research Fellowships

Linda J. Beck, Ph.D. candidate in political science, University of Wisconsin, Madison, for research on the role of cultural pluralism and ethnopolitics in the 1993 Senegalese national elections.

CHINA

Fang Zhu, Ph.D. candidate in political science, Columbia University, for research in Hong Kong on civil-military relations in Mao's China.

EASTERN EUROPE

Dissertation Research Fellowships

Arista Maria Cirtautas, Ph.D. candidate in political science, University of California, Berkeley. The ethic of Solidarity and the spirit of democracy.

Graduate Training Fellowships

Gerald A. McDermott, graduate student in political science, Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Additional training and exploratory research for comparative study of property rights in Czechoslovakia and eastern Germany.

Susan J. Overdorf, graduate student in political science, University of California, Berkeley. Advanced language training and preparation to write a dissertation on elite legitimization in East Germany and Czechoslovakia before 1989.

John W. Schiemann, graduate student in political science, Columbia University. Czech language study and preparation of research design for dissertation on democratic transitions in Hungary and Czechoslovakia.

Carol A. Timko, graduate student in political science, University of California, Berkeley. Training in survey research, quantitative analysis, and social mobilization stability for dissertation on democracy in Poland.

Predissertation Summer Travel Grants

Richard A. Hall, graduate student, department of political science, Indiana University.

Steven D. Roper, graduate student, department of political science, University of Missouri, Columbia.

Language Training Grants

Erica Nadelhaft (Polish), graduate student in Near Eastern and Judaic studies, Brandeis University.

Mitchell Orenstein (Czech), graduate student in political science, Yale University.

Tamara J. Resler (Lithuanian), graduate student in political science, University of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign.

John P. Richardson (Czech), graduate student in political science, University of California, San Diego.

Karl W. Ryavec (Slovene), professor of political science, University of Massachusetts, Amherst.

Jesse M. Savage (Macedonian), graduate student in Slavic studies, University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill.

Lisa E. Shiff (Polish), graduate student in political science, Northwestern University.

Gillian Wedon-Lumer (Czech), graduate student in studies of East Central Europe, Columbia University.

JAPAN

Dissertation Write-Up Grants

Robert W. Bullock, Ph.D. candidate in political science, University of California, Berkeley, for research on the social bases of the developmental state: agriculture and the conservative coalition in postwar Japan.

Takaaki Suzuki, Ph.D. candidate in political science, Columbia University, for research on the political economy of Japanese fiscal policy: assessing the international and domestic determinants of Japanese government spending in the 1970s and 1980s.

KOREADissertation Fellowships

David C. Kang, Ph.D. candidate in political science, University of California, Berkeley, for an examination of the role played by bureaucracies in South Korea under the Park regime.

Yung Chul Lee, Ph.D. candidate in government and international studies, University of Notre Dame, for research on the making of labor policies in Korea, 1970-1988.

LATIN AMERICA AND THE CARIBBEANDissertation Fellowships

Cynthia H. Chalker, Ph.D. candidate in political science, University of Pittsburgh, for research in Costa Rica on the politics of economic reform.

John A. Guidry, Ph.D. candidate in political science, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, for research in Brazil on everyday life and political consciousness on the urban frontier.

SOUTHEAST ASIA

Yasuhito Asami, Ph.D. candidate in government, Harvard University, for research on development of industrial relations in Thailand.

Martin Eric Rouse, Ph.D. candidate in government, Cornell University, for research on ASEAN-U.S. relations and emerging regionalism in Thailand and Indonesia.

Jonathan R. Stromseth, Ph.D. candidate in political science, Columbia University, for research on state-society relations in Vietnam since 1975.

SOVIET UNION AND ITS SUCCESSOR STATESGraduate Training Fellowships

Peter Blitstein, graduate student in political science, University of California, Berkeley, to study ethnic fragmentation since the end of World War I.

Jane Prokop, graduate student in government, Harvard University, to study the role of labor unions in the transition to a market economy in Russia and the Baltics.

Regina Smyth, graduate student in political science, Duke University, to study legislative institution building in the Russian Republic.

Brian Taylor, graduate student in political science, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, to study post-Soviet transition and change; Ukrainian language, history, and politics.

David Woodruff, graduate student in political science, University of California, Berkeley, to study prospects for market liberal ideologies in ex-Stalinist context.

Gavin Helf, Ph.D. candidate in political science, University of California, Berkeley, for a dissertation on regional politics and the Communist party of the Soviet Union, 1981-1991.

Sarah Mendelson, Ph.D. candidate in political science, Columbia University, for a dissertation on explaining change in foreign policy; the Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan.

Kathleen Smith, Ph.D. candidate in political science, University of California, Berkeley, for a dissertation on civic activism and state responses in the Soviet Union.

WESTERN EUROPE

Ton Notermans, Ph.D. candidate in political science, Massachusetts Institute of Technology. "The Rise and Decline of the Social Democratic Macroeconomic Policy Regime."

AFRICAAdvanced Research Grants

Jim Campbell, assistant professor of history, Northwestern University, to examine a series of specific conjunctures of African and African-American history, and the importance of the Diaspora as a site for the construction of new forms of black identity and consciousness.

EASTERN EUROPEResearch Workshops, Conferences, and Planning Meetings

Jill Irvine, University of Oklahoma, Norman, to support a planning meeting for a proposed conference on "Communist Rule in Yugoslavia."

Peter J. Katzenstein, Cornell University, in partial support of a series of workshops on "The Influence of Germany and the European Community on Small European Societies," to be held 1993-95.

Ivan Szelenyi, University of California, Los Angeles, to support a workshop on "Social Stratification in Eastern Europe after 1989," to be held at Lake Arrowhead, California, December 10-20, 1993.

JAPANAdvanced Research Grants

Gregory J. Kasza, associate professor of political science, Indiana University, for research on administered mass organizations: the imperial rule assistance movement in comparative perspective.

Dennis Tetsushi Yasutomo, associate professor of political science, Smith College, for research on the new multilateralism in Japan's cold-war diplomacy.

KOREAAdvanced Research Grants

David R. McCann, associate professor of Asian studies, Cornell University, for the translation and study of the poetry of So Wol (Kim Chongsik, 1902-34).

LATIN AMERICA AND THE CARIBBEANAdvanced Research Grants

Merilee S. Grindle, associate researcher at the Harvard Institute for International Development, for research in Mexico and Nairobi on economic and political change in Latin America and Africa.

Anthony W. Marx, assistant professor of political science, Columbia University, for research in Brazil on the formation of racial identity and popular mobilization in corporatist Brazil.

Catalina Smulovitz, associate researcher at the Center for the Study of State and Society (CEDES), for research in Argentina on the effects of democratization on the Argentine judiciary and legal system.

NEAR AND MIDDLE EAST
Advanced Research Grants

Leslie P. Peirce, assistant professor of Near Eastern studies, Cornell University, for research on family, neighborhood, and the law in the 16th- and 17th-century Ottoman Empire.

SOVIET UNION AND ITS SUCCESSOR STATES
Advanced Research Grants

Stephen Wegren, associate professor of political science, Southern Methodist University, for research on the politics of rural transition in Russia.

Research and Development Awards

Jeffrey Checkel, assistant professor of political science, University of Pittsburgh; and John Lepingwell, assistant professor of political science, University of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign, for a workshop entitled, "Bringing Russia Back In: International Relations, Comparative Politics, and the Study of the Former USSR."

OTHER PROGRAMS

Abe Fellowship Program

Wayne Cornelius, Gildred Professor of U.S.-Mexican Relations and professor of political science, University of California, San Diego. "Controlling Illegal Immigration in Industrialized Societies: Japan and the U.S. in Comparative Perspective."

Robert Gilpin, Dwight D. Eisenhower Professor of International Affairs, The Woodrow Wilson School of Public and International Affairs and the department of politics, Princeton University. "The Transformation of the Global Political Economy."

Vladimir Ivanov, advanced research fellow, The Program on U.S.-Japan Relations, Center for International Affairs, Harvard University. "Multilateralism and Non-Conventional Security in the North Pacific."

Sadafumi Kawato, professor of political science, Faculty of Law, Hokkaido University. "Comparative Study of Legislatures and the Development of Political Parties."

Fumiaki Kubo, associate professor, department of political science, Faculty of Law, Keio University. "U.S. Environmental Politics under the Divided Government: The Issue Network and the Institutionalized Movement."

Berlin Program for Advanced German and European Studies

Elizabeth Strom, Ph.D. candidate in political science, City University of New York. "Politics, Markets and Federal Transfers; Planning and Development in Berlin."

Akira Takenaka, Ph.D. candidate in political science, Columbia University. "Comparative Study of Policies toward Foreign Workers in Japan and the Federal Republic of Germany after World War II."

Benjamin Veghte, Ph.D. candidate in history, University of Chicago. "A Comparative Analysis of Urban Planning in Bremen and Rostock from 1945-1975."

Charles Vincent, Ph.D. candidate in political science, Harvard University. "Patron-Client State Relations."

International Predissertation Fellowship Program (IPFP)

Michael A. Barletta, graduate student in political science, University of Wisconsin, Madison: nuclear arms control in South America.

Clifford A. Bob, graduate student in political science, Massachusetts Institute of Technology: Malaysia's indigenous people's movement from a national and international perspective.

Bradley L. Glasser, graduate student in political science, Columbia University: rentier and semi-rentier states in the Middle East.

Ramanujam Manikkalingam, graduate student in political science, Massachusetts Institute of Technology: the politics of constitution-making in Colombia.

Walter Molano, graduate student in political science, Duke University: the redistribution of assets during privatization in Argentina.

Ann Marie Murphy, graduate student in political science, Columbia University: international political economy in Thailand.

Seth H. Racusen, graduate student in political science, Massachusetts Institute of Technology: race and ethnicity in labor markets and social formation in Brazil.

Bruce Rutherford, graduate student in political science, Yale University: the political process that produces a culturally distinctive conception of development in contemporary Egypt.

Marc A. Stern, graduate student in political science, University of California, San Diego: environmental public goods in Mexico from an institutional approach.

Patricia Taylor, graduate student in political science, Columbia University: approaches to the Latin American state through the example of Brazil.

Steven I. Wilkinson, graduate student in political science, Massachusetts Institute of Technology: censorship, the communications revolution and communal conflict in India.

Public Policy Research on Contemporary Hispanic Issues

Kenneth J. Meier, professor of political science, University of Wisconsin, Milwaukee, for a study of the interrelations among ability grouping, discipline and performance of Latino students: the role of Latino teachers and the urban community.

SSRC-MacArthur Foundation
Fellowships on Peace and Security in a Changing World

Clement Emenike Abide (Nigeria), Ph.D. candidate in political science, Queen's University. "Hegemony, Cooperation and Sub-Regional Security in a Changing World: Ghana, Nigeria and ECOWAS Integration."

Lars-Erik Cederman (Sweden), Ph.D. candidate in political science, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor. "The Propagation of Peaceful Islands: Peace and Democracy as Emergent Properties of Complex Adaptive Systems."

Christian G. Reus-Smit (Australia), Ph.D. candidate in political science, Cornell University. "Environmental Protection and International Justice: Ethical Claims, Political Conflicts, and the Evolution of Global Environmental Regimes."

Janet L. Roitman (United States), Ph.D. candidate in political science, University of Pennsylvania. "The Logics and Legitimacy of Exchange: Cattle, Cotton and Millet in Northern Cameroon."

Congressional Research Grants Help Fund Study of Congress

Eleven political scientists and historians received grants totalling $25,000 through the Dirksen Center's 1993 Congressional Research Grants program. The grants range from $1,200 to $3,000 and will be used to support studies of the U.S. Congress and congressional leadership. The Caterpillar Foundation provided $12,500 to match the center's support of the program.

Since 1975, the center has awarded over $225,000 to provide seed money for 160 research projects. Research topics are related to the study of Congress and congressional leadership, including external factors and influence, leadership resources, techniques and patterns, and public policy areas such as trade, regulation, the environment, labor relations, and technology development. Research produced by past grant recipients has resulted in numerous books, papers, articles, videotapes, and computer software programs.

Fifty applications were reviewed by an independent panel of judges. Of the 11 grants awarded, 10 were to graduate students. Winners include:

E. Scott Adler, Columbia University, "Institutional Change and Policy Change in Congress."

Brett Flehinger, Harvard University, "The LaFollettes and the Progressive-New Deal Connection."

Robert E. Jenner, University of Maryland at College Park, "FDR's Republicans: Congressional Supporters of the President's Foreign Policy, 1935-1941."

Elizabeth Koed, University of California at Santa Barbara, "The Immigration and Nationality Act of 1965."

Kathy Postel Kretman, University of Maryland at College Park, "The Impact of Women's Legislative Caucuses on Public Policy: An Examination of the Congressional Caucus for Women's Issues and the Women Legislators of Maryland."

Mark A. Peterson, Harvard University, "From Vested Oligarchy to Informed Entrepreneurship in Congress: New Opportunities for Health Care Reform?"

Mark Solovey, University of Wisconsin at Madison, "Congressional Leadership in the National Science Policy: The Case of Social Science Research."

Jeffrey C. Talbert, Texas A&M University, "Processing Health Policy Agendas in Congressional Committees."

Timothy Thurber, University of North Carolina, "The Politics of Equality: Hubert Humphrey and the Quest for Racial Justice."

Michael Vorenberg, Harvard University, "Congress, the Thirteenth Amendment, and the Politics of Emancipation."

Julian E. Zelizer, The Johns Hopkins University, "Wilbur Mills: Congressional Power and the Administrative State."

Pittsburgh's Institute of Politics Receives Two-Year Grant

The Institute of Politics at the University of Pittsburgh has received a grant in the amount of $50,000 over two years, from the Richard King Mellon Foundation.

The grant will be used to support a series of seminars and publications for elected officials, civic leaders and university personnel on critical public policy issues such as health care reform, workforce participation, school equity and regional tax policies.

The Aspen Institute's Nonprofit Sector Research Fund Announces Grants

The Nonprofit Sector Research Fund of The Aspen Institute has announced its fourth round of grant recipients. These grants are designed to encourage new basic and applied research on major issues affecting the nonprofit sector both in the United States and in other countries.

Joyce Gelb, CUNY, "Organizational Change and Transformation: Success, Survival and Decline Among Feminist Groups in the 1990s," $25,000. This study will examine the process of organizational transformation and change among feminist groups during the last decade. Changes in the external "political opportunity structure," internal pressures and the interaction between the two may result in new organizational development or decline. The study will examine issues related to transformation and success through analysis of three feminist groups which encountered financial and other difficulties during the 1980s. Through interviews with group activists and board members, other feminist group participants, contributors and policy makers, and examination of papers and other documentation related to group goals, structures, strategies and adaptation to changed circumstances, the study will attempt to discover whether change inevitably means decline.

Fredrick Harris, Northwestern University, "Something Within: Religion as a Mobilizer of African-American Political Activism," $20,000. This research seeks to investigate the effect of religion on black political activism in both the civil rights and post-civil rights eras of black politics. It argues that the institutional effects of black Christianity promote civic values and skills, factors that directly and indirectly influence black political activism.

Julius Ihonvbere, University of Texas at Austin, "Nonprofit Organizations and Civil Society in Africa: A Study of the Development and Role of Two Civil Liberties Organizations in Nigeria," $25,000. This project will examine the development and role of the Civil Liberties Organization (CLO) and the Committee for the Defense of Human Rights (CDHR) in Nigeria, and discuss their role in public education, advocacy, mass mobilization and in the promotion of new political attitudes in the ongoing transition to democracy. The roles of the CLO and CDHR in fostering the values of democracy, encouraging dialogue and accountability, providing avenues for grassroots organizations, intellectuals and other popular groups to express themselves and articulating an agenda for a strengthened civil society are examined in the context of building community, safeguarding community values and encouraging change in the political process. The study will highlight the linkage between nonprofits, civil society and democracy in Nigeria and Africa.

People in Political Science

Jennings Randolph Program for International Peace 1993-94 Fellows and Scholars

Distinguished Fellows are eminent scholars and practitioners whose careers are marked by extraordinary achievement.

Peter B. Reddaway, professor of political science, The George Washington University. The political right in Russia and its influence on Russian foreign policies.

Abdul Sattar, former Foreign Secretary of Pakistan; former Pakistani ambassador to India, the USSR, and the International Atomic Energy Agency. Ways in which India and Pakistan can improve relations.

Peace Fellows are persons whose careers demonstrate substantial accomplishments and promise for future leadership.

Fen O. Hampson, associate professor of international affairs and director of the Program in International Security, Carleton University, Ottawa, Canada. Successful implementation of negotiated peace settlements, focusing on experiences in Angola, Namibia, and elsewhere.

Norma J. Kriger, associate professor of political science, The Johns Hopkins University. Guidelines for demobilizing the military and reintegrating soldiers into society after a revolution, focusing on Zimbabwe.

Rotimi T. Suberu, lecturer, department of political science, University of Ibadan, Nigeria. Techniques of promoting ethnic harmony in Nigeria, and lessons applicable to other countries.

Saadia E. Touval, associate, Center for International Affairs, Harvard University. The effectiveness of third-party mediation in ethnic conflicts, using the Balkans and Somalia as case studies.

Visiting Fellows carry out projects for several months at the Institute.

Stanley Hoffmann, Dillon Professor of the Civilization of France and chairman of the Center for European Studies, Harvard University. A survey of the role of ethics in international relations, including criteria for evaluating policies in specific situations.

Peace Scholars are outstanding students in American university doctoral programs.

Josephine Burt, department of political science, Columbia University. "Citizen Action in Response to Political Violence: A Comparative Study of Peru and Guatemala."

Devin Hagerty, department of political science, University of Pennsylvania. "The Power of Suggestion: Opaque Proliferation, Existential Deterrence, and the South Asian Nuclear Arms Competition."

Curtis Ryan, department of political science, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. "Realignments and Crises in Inter-Arab Politics: The Cases of Jordan and Syria."

Daniel Thomas, department of government, Cornell University. "Human Rights Norms and the Promotion of Democracy: The Helsinki Process and Political Change in Eastern Europe, 1975-1989."

Astrid Tuminez, department of political science, Massachusetts Institute of Technology. "Russian Nationalism: Origins, Content, and Impact on Foreign Policy."

Elizabeth Wood, department of political science, Stanford University. "The Agrarian Question in El Salvador After a Decade of Civil War: The Politics of Rural Reconstruction and the Prospects for the Democratization of Rural Social Relations."

Travel Grants Funded by the British Embassy

The British Embassy in Washington provided funds this summer to enable the British Politics Group to offer travel grants to dissertation students and recent Ph.D.s for research in the UK. Early in July, William Muller (SUNY, Fredonia), past president of the BPG and chair of the selection committee, announced the winners. Each receiving a grant of $2,500 were Michelle Egan and Glenn Mitchell II. Egan is working on her dissertation under the direction of Alberta Sbragia at the University of Pittsburgh. Mitchell, who received his Ph.D. from the University of Iowa in December 1991, is an assistant professor at Florida State University.

Suffolk University Edmund S. Muskie Fellow

Suffolk University announces that it will have an Edmund S. Muskie Fellow in the fall of 1993. Lia Tsveniashvili, M.D., of the Republic of Georgia, will enroll in the MPA/Health Administration program. She is presently employed as an endocrinologist at the Republican Clinical Hospital of Infectious Diseases in Georgia. The Muskie Fellowship Program brings outstanding professionals from the former Soviet Union to the United States to study in the fields of public administration, business administration, economics, and law. Professor Sandy Matava directs the Muskie Fellowship program for the department of public management.

For further information contact: Professor Sandy Matava, Department of Public Management, Suffolk University, Boston, MA 02108-2770; (617) 573-8024.

1993 Research Fellows of the Bibliographical Society of America

The Bibliographical Society of America established in 1983 a program of short-term fellowships to help support scholars undertaking research associated with the study of the history of books and printing. The BSA is pleased to announce the Research Fellows named in its eleventh annual competition:

Mead T. Cain, The Population Council, "The Maps of the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge."

Sylvie L. Merian, Columbia University, "Characteristics of Syriac Bindings: A Codicological Study."

Wordon B. Neavill, University of Alabama, Tuscaloosa: "The History and Bibliography of the Modern Library Series."

Karen Nipps, Library Company of Philadelphia: "Lydia Bailey, a Life in a Printing Shop and Interpretive Essay."

Jeanne M. Shami, University of Regina, "A New Donne Manuscript: Collating and Editing."

Daniel L. Shealy, University of North Carolina, Charlotte: "Louisa May Alcott and Her Publishers."

Carl Spadoni, McMaster University Library: "A Bibliography of Stephen Leacock."

H. Leslie Thomson, University of Toronto, Erindale College, "A Study of Two Merry Milkmaids, Folger Copy 2: An Annotated Quarto."

Benjamin Weiss, Princeton University, "Fifteenth- and Sixteenth-Century Editions of Claudius Ptolemy's Geography."

Inquiries about the Fellowship Program should be addressed to the Executive Secretary, BSA, P.O. Box 397, Grand Central Station, New York, NY 10163.

Fellowship Committee: Richard Landon, Katharine Pantzer, Andrew Myers, Michael Ryan.

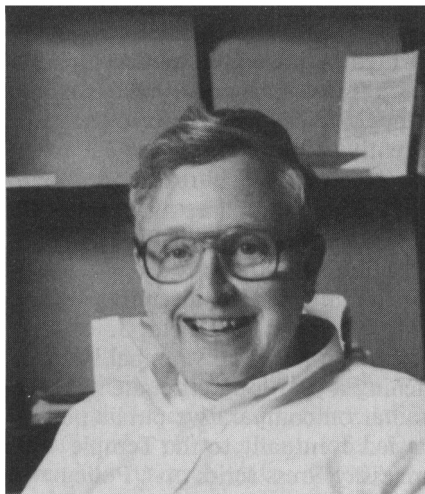

Other Awards and Honors

Terence W. Ball, professor, University of Minnesota, was selected as a recipient of the McKnight Research Award. This award is presented to outstanding scholars whose work is in the humanities as defined by the National Endowment for the Humanities.

Edward G. Carmines, Rudy Professor of Political Science, Indiana University.

Gilbert R. Cuthbertson, professor of political science at Rice University, received the George R. Brown Prize for Excellence in Teaching in 1993. This is the fifth time that he has won the Brown Prize, which was established in 1967 by the Brown Foundation to support innovative teachers. The Brown Prize, given annually, is based on the votes of alumni who received undergraduate degrees two years and five years previously.

Gilbert R. Cuthbertson

Marilyn Davis, associate professor of political science at Spelman College, has been honored by having her syllabi selected for three of the collections published by the APSA's Political Science Course Syllabi Project. The three syllabi were for the courses: "Political Thought from Machiavelli to the Present" in the Introduction to Political Theory collection; "Public Administration and Public Policy" in the Public Administration collection; and "Senior Seminar" in the Capstone/Senior Seminar collection.

Marilyn Davis

Phyllis Dininio, Yale University, Fulbright Graduate Student Award for 1993-94, Germany.

Robert T. Golembiewski, research professor of political science, University of Georgia, received the American Society for Public Administration's 1993 Dwight Waldo Award for career contributions to the literature of public administration.

Donald Green, Yale University, National Science Foundation Young Investigator Award.

Elizabeth M. Gunn, assistant professor, department of political science, the University of Oklahoma, has been selected as a Morris K. Udall Congressional Fellow by the Office of Technology Assessment, U.S. Congress. Gunn will be participating in the 1993-94 American Association for the Advancement of Science (AAAS) Science and Engineering Fellows Program in Washington, DC throughout the academic year.

Timothy V. Kaufman-Osborn, professor of political science, Whitman College, was recently awarded the Betty Nesvold Women and Politics Award by the Western Political Science Association.

Ricardo Laremont, Yale University, Fulbright Graduate Student Award for 1993-94, Algeria.

Douglas Reed, Yale University, Brookings Institute Graduate Student Fellowship for 1993-94.

Leroy N. Rieselbach, 1993 Distinguished Teaching Award of the Indiana University Graduate School.

J. Martin Rochester, University of Missouri-St. Louis, received the Emerson Electric Excellence in Teaching Award November 15, 1992.

Meredith W. Watts, professor, University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee, awarded a Fulbright Senior Fellowship for research in Germany on "Youth, Xenophobia and Right-Wing Extremism."

David Wilkins, University of Arizona, is the recipient of a Ford Foundation Post-Doctoral Fellowship awarded by the National Research Council. Wilkins will use his fellowship to conduct research during academic year 1993-94 at the University of Colorado at Boulder.

In Memoriam

Douglas E. Ashford

Douglas E. Ashford, Andrew W. Mellon Professor of Comparative Politics, died June 20, 1993 at the age of 64. Professor Ashford received his Ph.D. from Princeton in 1960 and joined the political science department at the University of Pittsburgh in 1982 after having taught previously at Indiana University and Cornell University. Professor Ashford also had an appointment in the department of history at the University of Pittsburgh and had held visiting positions at several British and French universities. Among his numerous academic honors Douglas Ashford was a Rhodes Scholar, a Guggenheim Fellow, Fellow of the Netherlands Institute of Advanced Studies, Simon Visiting Professor at the University of Manchester, and Fellow of the Center for Interdisciplinary Studies at the University of Bielefeld.

Survivors include his wife, Karen Knudson Ashford; five children, Elizabeth A. Ashford-Stinson of Ithaca, N.Y., Douglas E. Jr., of New York City, David S. of Cambridge, Mass., Michael A. of Washington, D.C., and Matthew K. at home; and four grandchildren.

Douglas Ashford was an extremely prolific scholar with a wide range of interests, although his work was unified through his interest in comparative politics and public policy. His initial scholarly publications were in the politics of North Africa, especially Morocco and Tunisia. He also was actively concerned with local government and its role in contemporary democracies. In addition to his own scholarly contributions in local government, Professor Ashford was active in organizing and editing research in this field. He organized and also contributed two volumes in a major series on the comparative public policy of advanced democracies. Throughout his work he established himself as a major commentator on the politics of France and the United Kingdom. Most of his research during the last years of his life was concerned with policy history, and particularly the development of the welfare state in Britain, France and Sweden. One major book on the development of the welfare state already has been published and a second will be published soon. Through that research he developed a deep interest in social theory and methodological alternative to those currently employed in the social sciences. He was widely read and always wanted to share his knowledge, and love of knowledge, with colleagues and students.

While at Cornell University, Ashford teamed with Peter J. Katzenstein and T. J. Pempel in teaching a year-long graduate seminar on comparative public policy that led eventually to the Temple University Press series on "Policy and Politics in Industrial Societies." The seminar was particularly popular with graduate students, not only for its broad-ranging contents, but for the diversity of academic and personal approaches of the three professors. Katzenstein's predilection for parsimonious tables regularly confronted Ashford's oddly out-of-place vignette; any temptation by Pempel to discover uniqueness in seemingly bizarre Japanese experiences would invariably find Ashford countering with some readily comparable example from the Netherlands or Vichy France. Moreover, any efforts by the first two to start and finish the seminar on time ran head first into Ashford's unwillingness even to wear a watch.

One of Ashford's greatest academic strengths was his commitment to primary sources. Excessively glib colleagues often found their boldly asserted, but undocumented speculations, unraveling quickly in the face of Ashford's ability to recite chapter and verse of British Parliamentary records from the late nineteenth century or to summarize the "real" motivations of inter-war French policymakers as revealed in their unpublished diaries. Yet his knowledge was never brandished as a tool of his ego; rather, it reflected always his search for academic truth and deeper understanding. As a result of his orientation he was quick to establish friendships with like-minded scholars across the boundaries of department, age, and nation.

Ashford's diversity was perhaps best demonstrated during 1971-72 when he bought an old upstate New York barn, tore it down, and used the beams and siding to design and build a marvelous contemporary home in the woods outside of Ithaca. He thought nothing of doing all the carpentry, plumbing and wiring himself, and seemed genuinely puzzled when other academics seemed amazed at his disparate talents. The home became a welcome gathering spot for faculty and graduate students from Cornell for the following ten years until he left for Pittsburgh. After moving to Pittsburgh Ashford again displayed his diversity by building a cabin deep in the Pennsylvania mountains. He seemed equally at home on the streets of Paris and in a cabin by a stream in the mountains.

During the last three years of his life Douglas Ashford faced two major surgeries and subsequent treatments with great courage, optimism, and a remarkably positive attitude. He continued to write and to plan his future research projects, including plans for a sabbatical in 1994 and a faculty seminar on nationalism. He was a man of strong opinions who was willing to take unpopular stands if he believed they were right. All this he did with a deep and sincere commitment to free inquiry and the importance of our intellectual pursuits.

T. J. Pempel
University of Wisconsin-Madison

B. Guy Peters
University of Pittsburgh

Erika S. Fairchild

Erika S. Fairchild died unexpectedly following a brief illness on November 25, 1992 in her home in Raleigh, North Carolina. She was professor of political science and public administration at North Carolina State University (NCSU) and in recent years served as the associate dean for research and graduate programs in the College of Humanities and Social Sciences.

Fairchild was born in New York