A NORTH-RIDING DOCTOR IN 1609

by W. R. Le Fanu

THE account here presented was written by a doctor who practised in the North Riding of Yorkshire; it records the names and homes of his patients, their ailments, treatments, and payments through the year 1609. It seems to be the earliest record of its kind to be published. The original is written in double columns on each side of the first fly-leaf of a copy of Thomas Geminus's English Anatomy printed in London in 1553. This copy was bought by the Royal College of Surgeons of England from the executors of the late Dr. W. H. Newton of Walmer, Kent, in the spring of 1959; its previous history is unknown.

The writer of the account does not give his own name nor say where he lived, but from the names of the villages where his patients lived we see that his practice lay in the country round Thirsk and Northallerton, from beyond the Swale eastwards across the low country and over the Hambleton Hills into Ryedale. This district measures roughly fifteen miles in each direction. A few patients came to him from places outside this district, but all from within the boundaries of the North Riding. The author varies his handwriting, using sometimes an old-fashioned English secretary-hand, sometimes a 'modern' Italianate script. He slips with equal ease, often in the same entry, from English into Latin and back again. These variations of language and script are not connected.

The account runs through one whole year in the old reckoning, from April 1609 to March 1610. The writer has summed his earnings month by month, but since some of the individual entries are defective we cannot check his arithmetic. We may notice however that his monthly sums add up to £16 17s. 6d., while he says that his sum for the whole year was £17 4s., 'for which I praise God'.

Most of his patients were no doubt ordinary country folk, but a few belonged to families of higher position. The Acroydes, Ascoughs, and Pallissers were landowning families well-known in their day; Mr. Key is described as 'a Fellow of Sidney's College'; Mrs. Metcalfe of Tilehouse, whose maid Elizabeth Barwick was also a patient of our doctor, seems to have been a lady of at least local importance. One patient is described as 'Mrs. Talbot's tenant's wife', and another as 'Mr. Wm. Fairfax his man'. Mrs. Bell of Allerton, mentioned several times, was the wife of a prominent burgess of whom there is record; she paid her doctor in wine and spices to the value of 3s. 'for former help', and sent another 3s. worth of 'wine and good perry, for letting her blood'. From one patient he accepted a cheese, from another 'conies 2 couple worth 18d.', and 'Margaret Clark for counsel sent fish worth 8d.' Many of his patients could no doubt be traced in the publications of the Yorkshire Parish Register Society, if the search were worth-while.

His usual fees were 1s. for a vomit or a purge and 2s. 6d. for more extensive treatment He charged 4s. for blood-letting and an eye-lotion, though Mr. Walker the schoolmaster at Osmotherley was charged only 2s. 6d. for three purges and three powders. To Roger Horsley of Thornton, for his epileptic daughter 'I prescribed a diet, and made him a drink with 3 vomits, lent him a bottle', and charged 10s. The fees were presumably paid forthwith, for only very occasionally does he record a debt. It is clear that most of his patients came to him and that he dispensed his own medicines; frequently indeed a husband or father came to collect medicine for a sick wife or child. He records being present when one patient died, but there is no mention of child-birth: doubtless that was attended by a committee of local matrons. Once or twice he must have ridden well beyond his usual rounds, in March 1610 for instance he was at Richmond, ten miles to the north-west of Northallerton.

Purges and vomits of unspecified prescription were the staple of his treatment. Senna he prescribed often, occasionally polypodium or euphorbium, once each coriander, rhubarb and 'dialacca' (powder of lac); except for this one exotic and now forgotten remedy, his medicine was simple and conservative, in an age of compound and extravagant prescriptions. He made up ointments and broths, he recommended quince marmalade and once prescribed a bath. Blood-letting was a routine procedure, once he set a broken arm, and one patient paid for 'sundry smokings with realgar'.

Ailments he often noted by a single Latin word, usually an adjective applied to the patient: apostematicus, astmaticus, dysintericus, epilepticus, faebricitans, hydropicus, ictericus, ischiadicus, pleureticus—these are self-explanatory. Melancholicus, phlegmaticus, and spleneticus, expressive of the accepted humoral pathology, are perhaps half-way to their modern psychological meaning, but their subjects were treated by physical means. What precisely he indicated by purulentus, and how he differentiated this from suppuratus, cannot readily be determined. He also used a few colloquial or now obsolete English terms.

I have numbered the entries for convenience of reference, and added a few explanatory notes. In compiling these and the indexes, I have used, besides the sources quoted in the notes and maps of the district, the following authorities:

NOTES

This entry is written above the second column, but seems to refer to the complete account.

Column 1 comprises nos. 2-33. The author has numbered the first six items as 1-5, the fifth item being without a number; thereafter he gives dates only.

- 2. The end of the line is illegible; probably in media vena.
- 3. The word following capite is obliterated.

- 4. suppuratus is written below astmaticus, which originally followed Thomas Tod.
- 5. Defective entry: 'Thomas Willis's son a boy of seven years . . . I prescribed rhubarb in infusion with senna. . . .'
- 6. Ann is crossed through before Dame.
- 12. Sowerby i.e. Sowerby on the Codbeck, near Thirsk, mentioned again at no. 45.
- 14. Tilehouse is an outlying grange at the east of Old Byland parish, above Ryedale.
- 15. Euphorbium: 'the poisonous gum-thistle', Gerard's Herbal 1597, p. 1014. The use of this herb derives from Dioscorides, but it is impossible to identify precisely the various species of Euphorbiaceae described by Dioscorides; Gerard evidently refers to an exotic species.
  - dei is crossed through before Diet.
  - Dialacca major: a powder whose principal ingredient was gum-lac, the red oriental resin used for making lacquer; Gerard's Herbal 1597, p. 1350, says that 'it prevaileth against the dropsy'.
- 23. Euphorbium: see note to no. 15.
- 24. '. . seized with burning fever, nigh unto death, I prescribed blood-letting and the bath'. ferb is crossed through before febri.
- 26. '... jaundiced, I gave a vomit, he was dying, he had very black urine.'
  - Angram (North Riding) is twenty-five miles west of Thirsk, and there is another Angram in the West Riding as far to the south; perhaps Ingram six miles north by east of Northallerton is intended, it was sometimes written 'Angram' in the sixteenth century.
- 27. in hypocondrijs: probably to be read with sick, in its original anatomical sense of 'the abdomen': the figurative psychological sense is of later usage.
- 30-3. These entries at the foot of the column are very much faded and partly defective.
  - 34. The first entry in column 2, but see the note to no. 1. This column comprises nos. 34-96; nos. 34-7 and 59-66 are defective at the outer margin.
  - 37. Mr Key mr of Art: presumably Thomas Kay who was born in Yorkshire, admitted a sizar at Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge in April 1601 and proceeded M.A. from Caius in 1608. He was ordained in 1610 and was afterwards a prebend of York. His son Richard was at Coxwold school. (Venn Alumni Cantabrigienses.) The form 'Master of Art' (not Arts) was usual till the late eighteenth century.
  - 44. antescrip: antescriptus, above-written, i.e. at no. 39. John is crossed through before George.
  - 45. Sowerby: see note to no. 12.
  - 46. above written, i.e. at no. 28
  - 51. Braford: probably Brafferton, six miles south of Thirsk.
  - 53. Thim (Thimbleby) is crossed through before ottrington.
  - 54. 'The sum of the foregoing entries since the last total.'
  - 55. xvij: 'xviij.d' is probably intended, but the ends of several consecutive lines are here compressed in the margin.
  - 56. pro pul. se.: for powder of senna.
  - 57. ping. of sen.: pinguefaction of senna. The word 'pinguefaction' is known in a medical context in 1597, apparently formed from the contemporary usage 'pinguefy' to soften with grease, and is used of an application for this purpose (Oxford English Dictionary).
  - 58. pro se is crossed through before of Cockhold.
  - 61. apostematica . . . cu (bito): having an abscess in her right elbow.
  - 64. dragh: drachm.
  - 67. Christopher: written with Greek XP abbreviation as 'xpofer', here and at nos. 161 and 184.
  - 68. marmelat: marmalade of quinces and sugar; 'marmelo' is the Portuguese for quince. Johnson in his Dictionary (1755) records this meaning alone; the earliest reference to orange marmalade in the Oxford English Dictionary is of 1769.

- 69. po r is crossed through before phlebotomized.
- 74. Hollme bower: possibly represents Holme Wood near Pickhill.
- 78. of Rippon is crossed through between George and Stoanes.
- 79. ward alias is written above the line.
- 82. scabb: scabies, whose parasitical cause was not recognized before the end of the seventeenth century.
- 83. Pharom: an obsolete form of Harome, written 'Arome' at no. 181.
- 85. sene and col.: senna and coriander, formerly called 'coliander'; 'col' was the apothecaries' customary abbreviation.
- 97. The first entry in the left-hand column on the verso of the leaf; this column comprises nos. 97-144. Nos. 97-103 are defective at the margin.
- 98-9. polip.: polypodium, a species of fern; its use as a purgative derives from Dioscorides. Gerard's Herbal 1597 recommends a dose of 1 to 3 ounces of 'the roots boiled with a little honey, milk and pepper'.
- 100. Perhaps Henry Milner, named at no. 11.
- 101. Perhaps Christopher Richinson, whose daughter is named at no. 184. mortuus is written above the line.
- 107. The p after pulvere is probably inadvertent, not an abbreviation.
- 121-6. The outer margin is defective.
  - 123. Perhaps Mr. Byerley, named at no. 128.
  - 124. Perhaps Wm. Bell, named at no. 154.
  - 127. Ware of Thirsk is named at no. 112.
  - 130. cullis: meat broth.
  - 131. unguentum splenicum is not found in the contemporary pharmacopoeias; perhaps written in error for ung. splanchnicum, a standard ointment of the period.
  - 132. realgar: arsenic sulphide.
  - 135. mr. is followed by her—probably an error for mrs, since George Stoanes of Allerton is named without prefix at nos. 22 and 78. wildfire: erysipelas.
  - 137. Kirkby: probably Kirkby Moorside, but there are several Kirbys and Kirkbys in the district.
  - 138. cerecloth: cered or waxed cloth, here probably equivalent to 'cerate', a stiff ointment spread on a cloth; Culpeper prescribes such a cerecloth for application after child-birth. The more familiar usage, meaning a winding-sheet for a corpse, is a derivate from this general term.
  - 145. This is the first entry in column 2 of the verso.
  - 150. vomitu: the MS has votumitu.
  - 153. lask: diarrhoea.
  - 155. willms is crossed through before a mayd, and willm jopsons syster is written below the
  - 160. hackenyeats: perhaps Hackness near Scarborough, for which the form 'Harkeneys' is recorded; but that lies further to the east of our doctor's district than Richmond, where he was at the previous entry, lies to the north-west.
  - 161. Christopher: see note to no. 67.
  - 162. The Dale: probably Ryedale.
  - 164. collerie: collyrium, eye lotion.
  - 178. Skipton: i.e. Skipton on Swale, between Baldersby and Sand Hutton.
  - 180. for: the MS has ofor.
  - 181. Arome: Harome, written 'Pharom' at no. 83.
  - 182. Picoll: Pickhill.
  - 183. perie: perry, cider made from pears.
- 184. Christopher: see note to no. 67.

THE WORSHIPFUL SOCIETY OF APOTHECARIES OF LONDON FACULTY OF THE HISTORY OF MEDICINE AND PHARMACY

FIRST AWARDS OF HONORARY FELLOWSHIP

At the inaugural session of the First British Congress on the History of Medicine and Pharmacy which was organized in London by the Faculty on 28th–30th September 1960, the Faculty's Chairman and Congress President, Dr. W. S. C. Copeman bestowed the Honorary Fellowship of the Faculty upon Sir Geoffrey Keynes and Professor Owsei Temkin. This new distinction is awarded for outstanding services to scholarship in the history of medicine and the number of Honorary Fellows is not to exceed twelve at any one time.

Conferring the first Honorary Fellowship on Sir Geoffrey Keynes, Dr. Copeman said:

In presenting Sir Geoffrey Keynes as the first Honorary Fellow of the Faculty we salute a man who has contributed and continues to contribute through a long and busy career to the
