

TWO NEW BOOKS

What Jesus Taught

By A. Wakefield Slaten

The purpose of this book is to make better understood the actual teaching of Jesus as presented in the Gospels of Mark, Matthew, and Luke. Back of that purpose is the conviction that a better understanding of this teaching is certain to react in a wholesome way upon all men's religious thinking and living. The author's aim is evidently not so much to furnish a manual of methods as to suggest a basis for class discussions and to indicate the spirit in which discussions may be most profitably carried on.

In four significant chapters the author prepares the way for an intelligent study of what Jesus taught. These four chapters, "Why People Study the Bible," "What the Bible Is," "The World Jesus Lived In," and "The Importance and Difficulty of Knowing What Jesus Taught," constitute a valuable introduction, not only to this book, but to any course of study dealing with the life and teaching of Jesus.

This volume provides a unique course of study for an adult class. It guides in the investigation of scriptural passages and stimulates discussion. The student of the New Testament — minister, layman, or teacher — will find this a most interesting and helpful handbook.

The Religion of the Psalms

By J. M. P. Smith

The Religion of the Psalms aims to give an understanding of the purpose for which the Psalms were written and of their function in the Jewish community. Its point of view is that the religion of the Psalms cannot be understood apart from some general knowledge of the conditions amid which they were written and the needs they were intended to satisfy. Only after one has learned the original significance of the Psalter is he in a position to use it intelligently for the instruction and comfort of his own generation.

Each chapter is rich in information and suggestions for the person who desires greater knowledge about the Psalms. Every minister will find here material which will open up the treasure house of the Psalms and thus increase the pleasure and profit of their use for devotional and sermon purposes.
