

been thought to lie outside its boundaries, to be 'foreign' to its scope. The only alternative, so far as I see, is to take εἰσάγων as = εἰσάγων πρὸς τὸν θεάτρον, 'bringing on the stage.' But does not the context justify me in taking the word rather as = εἰσάγων εἰς τὴν τραγῳδίαν, in which case it clearly means 'importing'?

To the Editors of THE CLASSICAL REVIEW.

I SEE that the careful review in your columns (November, 1911, p. 209) of vol. iv. of the Oxford translation of Aristotle complains of 'the extremely cumbrous system of pagination adopted by the editors . . . whereby the numbers of the sections only appear, and not the numbers of the pages. By adopting this method the use of the index is rendered unnecessarily difficult.'

Readers not familiar with the facts may be puzzled by the criticism of a system in which the numbers of the pages do not appear as a 'cumbrous system of pagination,' and misled by the statement that 'the numbers of the sections' are given. The facts are, of course, that the (often arbitrary and misleading) sections of Bekker are ignored; that the Bekker chapters, with the pages and lines of the Berlin edition, are accurately indicated in the margin; and that the index is, accordingly, a page and line index not only to the translation but to any modern text of Aristotle. The Oxford pages are unnumbered, because the indexes refer to the Berlin pages, not vice versa.
