APSA Council Reviews the Credential Referral Service

At its April 17, 1993 meeting, APSA's Council reviewed the Credential Referral Service, with the following three facts in mind:

- fewer than 2% of APSA's members use this service;
- the expense to APSA greatly exceeds the fees charged for this service; and
- many people who use the Credential Referral Service have alternatives, but not everyone does.

Balancing a concern for fiscal responsibility with a desire to help job applicants, the Council decided to retain the Credential Referral Service but to limit its scope and to require users to pay much more, but not all, of the cost of running this program.

Specifically, only those members earning $40,000 or less are eligible for the service. The fee to enroll is now $100 rather than $25. This covers four referrals per month. Any referrals above four cost $10 each. As in the past, participants must be current members of APSA and subscribers to the Personnel Service Newsletter.

Those members who are eligible and desire to enroll will need to submit $100 rather than $25. For current members of the service, the old rules apply until the subscription year is complete.

In a related matter the Council reaffirmed its policy of confidentiality for all letters of reference. Should APSA be notified by an institution that it cannot maintain such confidentiality—because of state open document laws or other reasons—our policy will be to withdraw the file and notify the applicant that this has occurred.

Questions about the new procedures should be directed to the

APSA Extends Family Memberships to Include Domestic Partners

Domestic partners of Association members are now eligible to join APSA under family memberships. The Administrative Committee of the APSA Council has affirmed the principle that all APSA programs that are available to spouses of members be available to domestic partners of members, which has led to the extension of the family membership option. The Committee on the Status of Lesbians and Gays in the Profession and APSA staff are now exploring other implications of this principle across all APSA activities. Any member with ideas, suggestions, or comments are invited to send comments to Mark Blasius, chair of the Committee, at APSA, 1527 New Hampshire Avenue, NW, Washington, DC 20036.

In principle, a domestic partnership, for purposes of APSA family membership, is defined as two individuals who live in a relationship similar to marriage, who are not married to anyone else, and who agree to be responsible for each other's welfare and to share financial obligations. Further reports on the implementation of this benefit and related policies will be made in subsequent issues of PS.

Committee on Professional Ethics, Rights and Freedoms

The following report provides an overview of the work of the Committee on Professional Ethics, Rights and Freedoms. The Committee is available to address individual complaints about violations of ethical standards of the discipline, as well as to work with political scientists, departments, and other institutions in advancing professional standards as articulated in the APSA Guide to Professional Ethics in Political Science.

The Guide to Professional Ethics in Political Science was reprinted in the June 1992 issue of PS. It is mailed to all departments participating in the APSA Departmental Services Program, and is sent free of charge to all senior doctoral students. Members can order a copy from APSA for $4.00 plus $1.00 shipping and handling for single copies.

Members of the Committee welcome hearing from political scientists about matters of practice and policy. All inquiries are handled in confidence. The Committee presently is chaired by John J. DiIulio, Jr., Princeton University. Other members are Seyom Brown, Brandeis University; Jean Elshain, Vanderbilt University; Armin Rosencranz, Pacific Energy and Resources Center; and Joseph Silver, University System of Georgia. Correspondence to the Committee should be sent to the Chair, care of APSA, 1527 New Hampshire Avenue, NW, Washington, DC 20036; and inquiries can be directed to Michael Brintnall at APSA by phone (202) 483-2512, Fax (202) 483-2657, and E-mail, incem024@sivm.
