Java: The Garden of the East

Eliza Ruhamah Scidmore

This late-nineteenth century travel book, written by an American visitor, has been described as a 'seminal work', for it opened Western eyes to the glories, curiosities, and mysteries of Java. Showing considerable courage, the author made it her business to see all that there was to be seen, and in consequence has been able to provide us unique vignettes, of Javanese and Dutch-Javanese life during the heyday of colonial rule. Illustrated £10.50

Java: Facts and Fancies

Augusta de Wit

This island has held a fascination for Westerners ever since the days the first pioneers arrived in search of spices. When the author went there in the first decade of this century she found not only '... the airy fancies, the legends and the dreams' but also 'a busy manufacturing country, prosperous and prosaic'. Her account, not only of the circles of Dutchmen or the Javanese aristocracy, but also of the ordinary people and scenes of everyday life, is both entertaining and an important social document. Illustrated £5.95

The Problem of Political Survival

D. S. Ranjit Singh

The author surveys the evolution of Brunei's relationship with Britain, and shows how despite the restrictions of British protection, her rulers struggled to maintain some autonomy. The degree of success they achieved and the tumultuous events of the 1950s and 1960s which helped pave the way for the restoration of independence are examined in a new light as the book sets out to describe developments from the Brunei, rather than the British point of view. £24

Islamic Law in South-East Asia

Michael Barry Hooker

In the main areas of Muslim population the law applicable to Muslims is Islamic Law in one form or another and the history of this law and its contemporary forms are the subjects of this book. The author draws on historical sources, including the law texts of the sixteenth to nineteenth centuries, the Shari'a as reformulated by the colonial powers, and the modern reforms which together make up the substances and administration of Islamic law. £34.50

Revolution Postponed

Women in Contemporary China

Margery Wolf. The Communist revolution promised Chinese women an equality with men in all matters legal, political, social, and economic. This book examines the extent to which the promise has been kept. Based on nearly a year of field research and interviews with over 300 women in six widely separated rural and urban areas, it gives us a vivid picture of Chinese women today—their daily lives, their views of the present, their hopes for the future. The women's opinions, combined with the author's astute observations on their local and national context, add up to a wholly new perspective on an all too familiar problem. $21.95

A Dictionary of Official Titles in Imperial China

Charles O. Hucker. Premodern Chinese documents contain a great number and variety of official titles important to an understanding of traditional Chinese government but often elusive in meaning and significance. This encyclopedic work translates and defines more than 8,000 personal titles and institutional names spanning the period from antiquity to the mid-19th century. Arranged alphabetically by Wade-Giles romanizations, basic entries include Chinese characters and a suggested English translation; most go on to supply historical and comparative information. The Introduction provides a dynasty-by-dynasty account of China's governmental structure. $49.50

Women, Power, and Economic Change

The Nandi of Kenya

Regina Smith Oboler. The author examines the impact of colonialism and the cash economy on the Nandi, a semi-pastoral and patrilineal people of western Kenya, emphasizing changes in women's and men's economic roles and their respective relations to property and to each other. Since the sex roles associated with production and property relations are linked to sex roles in other areas, these areas are also analyzed. Although most of the book is ethnographic in nature, it also looks at Nandi gender roles in the context of economic history. Illus. $29.50
