*Cover. The tenth-century AD runestone (2.36m in height) at Løborg, southern Jutland, Denmark. The stone is one of several that mention the name 'Thyra', including two runestones at the royal seat of Jelling. New 3D-scanning reveals that some of the carvings were carved by the same hand, supporting the hypothesis that the stones all refer to the same individual: Queen Thyra. For more information, see 'A lady of leadership: 3D-scanning of runestones in search of Queen Thyra and the Jelling Dynasty' by Lisbeth Imer, Laila Kitzler Åbfeldt & Henrik Zedig in this issue.
