ON HUMAN THINKING

K. W. MONSARRAT

'What Mr. Monsarrat offers us . . . is a new kind of rationalism: an ethic that is non-ethical in source: a reading of history which repudiates Hegel as well as Marx; a humanism which deems reliance on survival after death as a lapse from "living well now" but which comes near enough to Christianity to concede that the man who is "benevolent and collaborating" finds "that it is no longer a God of Power whom he is worshipping but a God of Wisdom and Grace".'
