which was approved unanimously by the Council:

The APSA Council deplores the apartheid politics of the government of South Africa, and requests the Board of Trustees of the Trust and Development Fund as a matter of urgency to review the investment policies of our currently held mutual funds.

In light of the long-standing APSA policy concerning the Sullivan Principles we recommend that this review be carried forward with an eye towards moving out of any fund that includes in its portfolio companies that do not adhere to these Principles, or firms that do business directly with the government of South Africa. We urge the Board to seek out alternative high-performance funds that meet these criteria.

Small Grant Program

In other action the Council increased the annual budget of the Small Grant Program to $12,000 from $10,000 and added an additional representative from a small college to the Research Support Committee which distributes the grants. President-elect Aaron Wildavsky announced that his appointee would be Huev Perry of Southern University.

Under the program grants up to $1,500 are awarded to APSA members from non-Ph.D.-granting institutions as well as to those not affiliated with an academic institution for the purpose of assisting research. Fundable activities include such activities as travel to archives or to conduct interviews, purchase of datasets, and administration and coding of interviews. In 1985, the first year of the program, a total of ten grants were made. (See PS, Summer 1985, pp. 623-624.)

Salisbury Named Book Review Editor of the APSR

Samuel C. Patterson, incoming managing editor of the American Political Science Review, has named Robert H. Salisbury book review editor.

Robert Salisbury of Washington University in St. Louis is new book review editor of the APSR.

Salisbury is Sydney W. Souers Professor of American Government at Washington University in St. Louis where he has spent most of his career and has served as chairman of the Department of Political Science and director of the Center for the Study of Public Affairs. He has been a visiting lecturer at 27 universities in the United States and abroad.

In addition to the eight books he has published, Salisbury has written numerous articles for the major journals in the profession. His most recent publication for the March 1984 issue of APSR, "Interest Representation: The Dominance of Institutions," extended his path breaking work on interest groups. He has also written on the politics of education, urban politics, public policy analysis, governmental reorganization, elections, political parties, and Congress.

Salisbury is a former vice president of APSA and has served on its Council. He has been both president and program chair of the Midwest Political Science Association. He has served on the editorial board of the American Journal of Political Science and the American Politics Quarterly.

Active in civic affairs, Salisbury has been a consultant for the Office of Economic Opportunity, the U.S. Office of Education, and the U.S. Conference of Mayors. He has also served as a member of the St. Louis County Charter Commission and the Missouri Commission on Local Government.

PS asked Salisbury to comment on his plans for the book review section of the Review, and his response, intended as an open letter to the discipline, follows:

As book review editor of the APSR, building on the splendid work of my predecessors, I hope to do several things. First, I want to make the review section as interesting and provocative to read as possible so that political scientists will find intellectual stimulation there as well as information and evaluation of newly published work. Whenever appropriate I will commission essays from established scholars and ask them to review substantive areas of inquiry and traditions of scholarship as well as to assess the current book or books under review.
