THE ORIGINS OF JUSTICE
THE EVOLUTION OF MORALITY, HUMAN RIGHTS, AND LAW

John O'Manique

The Origins of Justice offers a more benign view than that of Thomas Hobbes and later followers of the origins of the social contract. With the birth of self-consciousness, O'Manique shows how humans, within the context of their communities and cultures, construct systems of justice that transcend the biological base from which they emerged.

LAW, POLITICS, & SOCIETY IN THE MIDWEST

CALL FOR MANUSCRIPTS

OHIO UNIVERSITY PRESS is pleased to announce a book series on Law, Society, and Politics in the Midwest under the general editorship of Paul Finkelman, Chapman Distinguished Professor of Law at the University of Tulsa College of Law. Although legal history has become an important and vital field of law as well as historical studies, there are few general histories of any state's law and few important works on the interaction between law and society in the Midwest.

Beginning with enactment of the Northwest Ordinance the region that is now the Midwest passed from wild frontier, to federally administered Territories, to sovereign states, and on to the dynamic tension of federal-state relations that exists today. The area's economies developed from subsistence farming and resource extraction, whether it was the coal mines of Ohio, the timberlands of Michigan, or the oil fields of Indiana, and into industrial agriculture, steelmaking, and automobile manufacturing. The region confronted conflicts between Native Americans and new settlers and constitutional questions of race relations and slavery, freedom of conscience, and women's rights, as well as the tensions and rivalries between the native-born and successive waves of immigrants. Issues of labor relations, personal status (including marriage and divorce), and the use of law for economic development emerged in the Midwest often in new and unique ways.

This series seeks to publish books on Midwestern legal history and the culture and politics of law in the Midwest. The thrust of the series is historical, but the editor will consider contemporary issues as well. Manuscripts may be narrowly legal or more general studies that place law in a social and/or political context. It is expected that most authors will be historians, but the series will welcome manuscripts in political science, law, sociology, economics, and other fields.

Manuscript proposals should be sent to Gillian Berchowitz, Ohio University Press, Scott Quadrangle, Athens, OH 45701.
