

---

About the Authors

---

Tom Baker is Connecticut Mutual Professor of Law and Director of the Insurance Law Center at the University of Connecticut School of Law. In addition to writing about tort law in action, he writes about insurance, risk, and responsibility. He is the editor, with Jonathan Simon, of Embracing Risk: The Changing Culture of Insurance and Responsibility (University of Chicago Press, 2002).

Marian J. Borg is Associate Professor of Sociology at the University of Florida, where she teaches courses in criminology, deviance, and social control. Her research focuses on analyses of various forms of social control, including capital punishment, violent confrontation, drug testing, and mediation. Her publications have appeared in Criminology, Annual Review of Sociology, Deviant Behavior, and Homicide Studies.

Elizabeth Heger Boyle is Assistant Professor of Sociology and Law at the University of Minnesota. She studies the interconnections between international, national, and local action. Current research projects include a multilevel analysis of cultural conflict, focusing on the case of female genital cutting, and a study of law, gender, and naturalization among Somali refugees to the United States.

Paul Brace is Clarence L. Carter Professor of Political Science at Rice University. His research has appeared in the American Political Science Review, American Journal of Political Science, Journal of Politics, Political Research Quarterly, Polity, Social Science Quarterly, American Politics Quarterly, State Politics & Policy Quarterly, Legislative Studies Quarterly, and numerous other journals, law reviews, and edited volumes. He is the author of State Government and Economic Performance (Johns Hopkins University Press, 1993), co-author of Follow the Leader: Opinion Polls and the Modern Presidents (Basic Books, 1992), and co-editor of American State and Local Politics (Chatham House, 1999) and The Presidency in American Politics (NYU, 1989). He has served on the editorial boards of the American Political Science Review, Journal of Politics, Political Research Quarterly, Social Science Quarterly, American Politics Quarterly, American Review of Politics, Albany Law Review, State and Local Government Review, State Politics and Policy Quarterly, and others, and has been president of the State Politics and Policy Section of the American Political Science Association. He is currently co-principal investigator on the State Supreme Court Data Project, sponsored by the National Science Foundation.

Martin Frankel is Professor of Statistics and Computer Information Systems at Baruch College, City University of New York. His research interests are in the area of survey sampling and methodology as well as the applications of statistical techniques in areas of Health Care, Education and Public Policy. Professor Frankel is a Fellow of the American Statistical Association and has published in The New England Journal of Medicine, Journal of the Royal Statistical Society, Science, Physical Review A, and other publications.

Jon B. Gould is Assistant Professor of Public and International Affairs and Visiting Assistant Professor of Law at George Mason University, where he is also Assistant Director of the University's Administration of Justice Program and a member of the Women's Studies faculty. A lawyer and political scientist, Gould's research investigates the interplay between legal norms and social and political behavior. He has written on racial and sexual harassment, judicial administration, police compliance with the Fourth Amendment, and constitutional and electoral reform. The article in this issue marks the beginnings of a book that will compare the influence of collegiate hate speech policies on legislation and societal attitudes toward free speech.

Anne Griffiths is an LL.B from Edinburgh University (1978) and a Ph.D. in Law from the University of London (1988). Professor Griffiths has been a Lecturer of Private Law at Edinburgh University since 1980. She is a regular visitor to the Law School at the University of Texas and has visited at other distinguished law schools, such as Cornell and the University of Witwatersrand, South Africa. Her major research interest is in the area of family law, and she is the author of books, book chapters, and articles on the subject. She will be teaching a seminar in the Anthropology of Law and a course in Family Law in the Spring of 2002 at the University of Texas.

Melinda Gann Hall is Professor of Political Science at Michigan State University. Her research has appeared in the American Political Science Review, Journal of Politics, Political Research Quarterly, Social Science Quarterly, American Politics Quarterly, State Politics & Policy Quarterly, Judicature, and numerous other journals, law reviews, and edited volumes. She has served on the editorial boards of the American Journal of Political Science, Journal of Politics, Political Research Quarterly, American Politics Quarterly, American Review of Politics, Albany Law Review, State and Local Government Review, State Politics and Policy Quarterly, and others, and on the Executive Councils of the Midwest and Southwest Political Science Associations. In 1999 she won the American Judicature Society Award from the Law and Courts Section of the American Political Science Association. Currently she is co-principal investigator on the State Supreme Court Data Project, sponsored by the National Science Foundation.

Karen F. Parker is Assistant Professor of Sociology in the Center for Studies in Criminology and Law and Department of Sociology at the University of Florida. Her current research interests include exploring labor market and racial competition effects on urban violence, working with a research team to examine racial profiling in the context of Miami communities, and incorporating gender segregation in labor markets into the study of homicide offending and victimization. Her most recent publications on these topics appear in Social Forces, Journal of Quantitative Criminology, Homicide Studies, and Social Science Quarterly.

Francesca Polletta is Associate Professor of Sociology at Columbia University, where she studies the strategic and cultural dimensions of social movements. She is the author of Freedom Is an Endless Meeting: Democracy in American Social Movements (in press, University of Chicago) and editor, with Jeff Goodwin and James M. Jasper, of Passionate Politics: Emotions and Social Movements (University of Chicago Press, 2001).

Carroll Seron is Professor in the School of Public Affairs at Baruch College and in the Department of Sociology at the Graduate Center, City University of New York. Some of her publications include The Business of Practicing Law: The Work Lives of Solo and Small Firm Attorneys (Temple University Press, 1996) and, with Cynthia Fuchs Epstein, Robert Saute, and Bonnie Oglensky, The Part-time Paradox: Time Norms, Professional Life, Family and Gender (Routledge, 1999). She has published articles in Law & Society Review, The Annual Review of Sociology, and New York University. Currently, she has a grant from the National Science Foundation to study the public's perceptions of the normative dimensions of police-citizen encounters, with a particular concern to distinguish the public's understanding of the difference between aggressive policing and brutality.

Melissa Thompson is a doctoral candidate in sociology at the University of Minnesota. Her interests include law, gender, crime, and mental illness. She is currently completing a dissertation on gender differences in psychiatric referrals for felony defendants.

Gregg Van Ryzin is Associate Professor in the School of Public Affairs, Baruch College, City University of New York. His research interests include housing and community development policy, program evaluation, and citizen satisfaction with public services. His articles have appeared in Evaluation Review, Journal of Policy Analysis and Management, Journal of Urban Affairs, Policy Studies Journal, Public Productivity and Management Review, and other journals.