

Call for Submissions
Special Issue of DRJ: Randy Martin and Dance Studies
Editors: Mark Franko and Jens Richard Giersdorf

Deadline: March 30, 2016

This special issue is dedicated to exploring all aspects of Randy Martin's engagement(s) with movement, choreography, improvisation and Dance Studies from pedagogical, theoretical, institutional, and historical perspectives.

Randy Martin's research and scholarship were protean and mercurial as they moved through and within ethnography, sociology, Marxism, economic theory, public policy debate, political theory, and dance history and practice. His political activism was evident in his dedication to the journal Social Text and his key role in founding the Department of Art and Public Policy at Tisch School of the Arts, New York University.

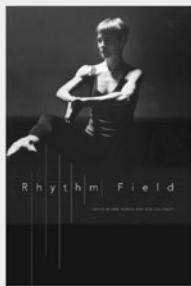

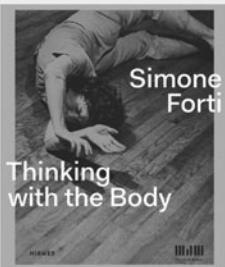

For this special issue, we invite the submission of new articles that explore Randy's work in research and scholarship, activism, program building, and institutional critique. Submissions should expand upon the complexities of Martin's thought relative to dance and its attendant disciplines but can also build into new areas of thought that are indebted to him.

6,000-9,000 words. Shorter pieces will also be considered.

Final deadline for submissions: March 30, 2016

Inquiries welcome: Mark Franko (mark.franko@temple.edu)
Jens Richard Giersdorf (jgiersdorf@mmm.edu)
