

NOTES ON THE CONTRIBUTORS

ASTRID OBERBORBECK ANDERSEN holds a PhD in social anthropology from the University of Copenhagen. Her dissertation “Water Is Life: An Ethnography of Urban Ecology and Water Politics in Arequipa, Peru” analyzes the complex entanglements of people, technology, resources, politics, and knowledge in an urban ecology. She is currently a postdoctoral researcher at the University of Copenhagen as part of the interdisciplinary research project “Living Resources and Human Societies around the North Water in the Thule Area, NW Greenland.”

MARK ASPINWALL is professor of international studies at the Centro de Investigación y Docencia Económicas (CIDE), Mexico City, and professor of politics at the University of Edinburgh, Scotland. His research examines rule of law and regional integration in North America. His most recent book, Side Effects (Stanford University Press, 2013) compares the effects of NAFTA's side agreements on Mexican governance.

AVIVA CHOMSKY is professor of history and coordinator of Latin American, Latino, and Caribbean studies at Salem State University in Massachusetts. Her books include Undocumented: How Immigration Became Illegal (2014; Mexican edition, 2014), A History of the Cuban Revolution (2nd ed., 2015), Linked Labor Histories: New England, Colombia, and the Making of a Global Working Class (2008), They Take Our Jobs! And Twenty Other Myths about Immigration (2007; US Spanish edition 2011, Cuban edition 2013), and West Indian Workers and the United Fruit Company in Costa Rica, 1870–1940 (1996). She has also coedited several anthologies, including The People behind Colombian Coal: Mining, Multinationals and Human Rights/Bajo el manto del carbón: Pueblos y multinacionales en las minas del Cerrejón, Colombia (2007), The Cuba Reader: History, Culture, Politics (2003), and Identity and Struggle at the Margins of the Nation-State: The Laboring Peoples of Central America and the Hispanic Caribbean (1998).

JOHN F. COLLINS is director of Latin American and Latino studies at Queens College and associate professor of anthropology at Queens College and the CUNY Graduate Center. He is the author of Revolt of the Saints: Memory and Redemption in the Twilight of Brazilian Racial Democracy (Duke University Press, 2015) and coeditor of Ethnographies of U.S. Empire (Duke University Press, forthcoming). Collins has written numerous scholarly articles that have appeared in Ethnos, Cultural Anthropology, Comparative Studies in Society and History, American Ethnologist, Radical History Review, Journal of Latin American and Caribbean Anthropology, and Critique of Anthropology.

ANDRÉS DONOSO ROMO is a researcher from the Centro de Estudios Avanzados at the Universidad de Playa Ancha, Valparaíso, Chile. He has an undergraduate degree in social anthropology and a master's degree in Latin American studies from the Universidad de Chile. In addition, he has a PhD in Latin American integration from the Universidade de São Paulo. His publications include Identidad y educación en América Latina: Ensayos (Caracas: Editorial Laboratorio Educativo, 2012) and Educación y nación al sur de la frontera: Organizaciones mapuche en el umbral de nuestra contemporaneidad, 1880–1930 (Santiago: Editorial Pehuén, 2008).

LAUREN DUQUETTE-RURY is assistant professor in the Department of Sociology at UCLA. Her research examines the consequences of international migration on democracy and development in migrant sending and destination countries.

DANIEL ENCINAS received his BA in political science at the Pontificia Universidad Católica del Perú (PUCP) in 2013. That year he won the award for best senior thesis in the Department of Social Sciences. He is currently a teaching and research assistant at the PUCP's Department of Political Science. His main areas of interest are political regime changes, state capacity, and bureaucracy and technocracy in Latin America.

DIEGO FOCANTI is currently a PhD student in the Economics Department at Brown University. He holds a master's degree in economics from Brown University and a bachelor's degree in economics from the Universidad de Buenos Aires. Before his studies at Brown he was a research fellow at the Research Department of the Inter-American Development Bank in Washington, DC, where he worked on research in political economy topics.

ABIGAIL FRIENDLY is a postdoctoral fellow at the Institute on Municipal Finance and Governance, Munk School of Global Affairs, at the University of Toronto. She received her PhD in planning from the University of Toronto and her MSc in global politics from the London School of Economics. Her research focuses on participatory planning, issues of social justice, and state-society relations in the context of planning in Brazilian cities.

DENNIS GILBERT is professor of sociology at Hamilton College. His publications include Sandinistas: The Party and the Revolution (Blackwell, 1990), Mexico's Middle Class in the Neoliberal Era (University of Arizona Press, 2007), and The American Class Structure in an Age of Growing Inequality, 9th ed. (Sage, 2015). His current project is a manuscript titled "The Oligarchy and the Old Regime in Latin America."

MARK HALLERBERG is professor of public management and political economy at the Hertie School of Governance and is director of Hertie's Fiscal Governance Centre. He is also a nonresident fellow at the Brussels think tank Bruegel. He is the author of one book, coauthor of a second, and coeditor of a third. He has published more than twenty-five articles and book chapters on fiscal governance, tax competition, and exchange-rate choice.

JOSÉ ANTONIO HERNÁNDEZ COMPANY is a PhD student in the Department of Political Science at the University of Chicago. He conducts research on Latin America, with a specific interest on political parties, ideologies, and clientelism. His dissertation examines the emergence of opposition parties in authoritarian regimes and the consequences that this has for the parties' electoral strategies after democratization.

JUAN FERNANDO IBARRA is assistant professor in the Public Administration Division at the Centro de Investigación y Docencia Económicas (CIDE) in Mexico City.

His research interests include the political development of Latin American countries, the study of federalism and local government, and the sources of economic and political divergence of subnational units in Mexico.

CYNTHIA MACHADO CAMPOS is a visiting research associate at King's College London and at University of Essex. She is a member of the research group História e Linguagens Políticas at Conselho Nacional de Pesquisa/UNICAMP (Universidade Estadual de Campinas). She obtained her MA from Pontifícia Universidade Católica de São Paulo in 1992, her PhD from UNICAMP and Freie Universität Berlin in 1998, and was a postdoctoral researcher in the Department of History, University of Essex, in 2007–2008. She has held positions as associate professor in the human science interdisciplinary postgraduate program, in the postgraduate history program, and in the Department of History at Universidade Federal de Santa Catarina. She has published numerous articles and two books: Santa Catarina, 1930: Da degenerescência à regeneração (Ed. UFSC, 2009) and A política da língua na era Vargas: Proibição do falar alemão e resistências no sul do Brasil (Ed. UNICAMP, 2006).

ANA AMÉLIA M. C. DE MELO. Formada em história pela UFRJ com mestrado e doutorado em ciências sociais (CPDA-UFRJ). Professora do Departamento de História e do Programa de Pós-graduação em História Social da UFC. Pesquisa em história intelectual na América Latina, nos anos 1930–1940. Publicações recentes: “Escritores entre fronteiras: diálogos de uma geração” em História e historiografia: Perspectivas e abordagens (Nogueira e Silva Filho, orgs., Ed. Universitária UFPE, 2014); Ana Amelia de Moura Cavalcante de Melo e Irenísia Torres Oliveira, orgs., Aproximações: Cultura e política (Expressão Gráfica, 2013); “Los intelectuales en los interstícios de la política (Brasil, 1940–45)”, Diálogos Latinoamericanos 19 (2012).

LETICIA NERIA lectures in Spanish and Mexican culture at Tecnológico de Monterrey, Campus Estado de México. Her research focuses on humor and dissent in Mexican visual culture, especially comics and cinema in the 1970s. She received her PhD in Spanish studies from the University of St. Andrews, Scotland.

KARSTEN PAERREGAARD is professor of anthropology at the Department of Global Studies, University of Gothenburg. His current research is focused on climate change, water scarcity, and environmental migration in Peru. His publications include Linking Separate Worlds: Urban Migrants and Rural Lives in Peru (Berg, 1997), Peruvians Dispersed: A Global Ethnography of Migration (Lexington Books, 2008), and Return to Sender: The Moral Economy of Peru's Migrant Remittances (University of California Press, 2014).

FELÍCIA PICANÇO is professor of sociology at the Federal University of Rio de Janeiro, with a research focus on gender, race, and inequalities among young people in work and education. Recent publications analyze special aspects of the inequalities of production and reproduction in Brazilian society: work-family balance, youth access to higher education, and domestic work. Recent research investigates young people's conventional and unconventional trajectories in a low-income neighborhood of Rio de Janeiro.

CARLOS SCARTASCINI is principal economist at the Research Department of the Inter-American Development Bank. He holds a PhD in economics from George Mason University and a licenciatura en economía from Universidad Nacional del Sur in Argentina. His areas of expertise are political economy, comparative politics, and public finance. He has published several articles in prestigious academic journals and is coeditor of five books.

ALBERTO SIMPSON is assistant professor in the Department of Political Science at the University of Chicago. He studies electoral manipulation, corruption, authoritarianism, and related topics in the political economy of development.

ASTRID BREDHOLT STENSRUD holds a PhD in social anthropology from the University of Oslo. She is employed as a postdoctoral researcher at the Department of Social Anthropology, University of Oslo, as part of the research project "Overheating: The Three Crises of Globalization." Her PhD dissertation focused on entrepreneurial activities and animistic practices in a working-class neighborhood in Cusco, Peru. Her current research interests include environmental change, climate change, water management, globalization, and state practices in the Peruvian Andes.

ALBERTO VERGARA is a postdoctoral researcher (2012–2014) at the Weatherhead Center for International Affairs at Harvard University, with a grant from the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada. He received his PhD from University of Montreal, where he held a Trudeau Doctoral Scholarship. He has lectured on Latin American politics in the Harvard Department of Government and in the Department of Political Science at the University of Montreal. He is completing a manuscript comparing center/periphery relations in Bolivia and Peru during the second half of the twentieth century.

GISELA ZAREMBERG es doctora en ciencias políticas por la Facultad Latinoamericana de Ciencias Sociales (FLACSO, México) y maestra en políticas sociales por la Universidad de Buenos Aires, Argentina. Actualmente se desempeña como profesora-investigadora en FLACSO, Sede México. Es miembro del Sistema Nacional de Investigadores (SNI) en México, en el nivel II. Sus principales temas de investigación tratan sobre políticas públicas, redes de política, gobernanza y género. Entre sus últimas publicaciones se encuentra el libro Votos, mujeres y asistencialismo social en el México priista y la Argentina peronista (1947–1964), por el cual ha recibido el premio Donna Lee Van Cott, al "Mejor Libro sobre Instituciones Latinoamericanas" (LAPIS, LASA), el libro Redes y jerarquías: participación, representación y gobernanza local en América Latina (Venezuela, Brasil, México y Nicaragua) y el libro El género en las políticas públicas: Redes, reglas y recursos.

PETER ANTON ZOETTL is a postdoctoral research fellow at the Portuguese Centre for Research in Anthropology (CRIA-IUL). His main research interests lie in the social uses of images and the employment of film and photography as a medium for the representation of anthropological knowledge. He recently has carried out research in the fields of indigenous studies, youth studies, legal anthropology, and anthropology of performance in Brazil, Germany, Portugal, and Lusophone Africa.