data, it is less convincingly: e.g., 'there is a striking absence' 'built' houses at Pera, most of the homes being hollowed out' the rock' (p. 67) will sound strange to those who have studied t^{\dagger} rock-cut monuments of the Nabatean capital.

This is perhaps the main criticism we would offer of Profess Winnett's reasoned investigations and analyses, all of which deserf careful thought and study, and are valuable in their limits.

ROLAND POTTER, O.P.

THE DESCENT OF THE DOVE. By Charles Williams. (Faber; 15s.)

It is perhaps significant that Charles Williams had first intende to entitle this book A History of Christendom. It remains a histor of what he thought, and many will think with him, the most if portant thing in the Church, namely the unending struggle reconcile the natural with the supernatural, the human and the divine. Of course in a brief survey over two thousand years may episodes and periods will be too hastily dismissed and each read will find his own cause for complaint. But what remains throughout is the unalterable fact that the Church is the Body of Christ and the central strand in the texture of her history is the movement ithe Holy Ghost in her life. So we can see, and hear, the Spirit God which once brooded over the chaos of creation now uttering through the cries of a Christian slave-girl martyr, through t^{ij} philosophy of Augustine of Hippo, through the authoritative voit of the Church's Councils, through the mystics and allegorical poet, and even in our own day through the Newmans and Claudels. I whole book is in fact a commentary on Verbum Caro Factum Est and this second edition is more than ever welcome when the clamour of statesmen, philosophers and even poets may easily deafen us to the more subtle cadences of the Eternal Word.

GERARD MEATH, O.P.

SILVER SHEAVES. Published by the Missionary Sisters of Our Lad of the Rosary, Killeshandra, Ireland; 7s.6d.

This is a record of twenty-five years of missionary work in Centr Africa. Founded by the late Dr Shanahan, Vicar Apostolic of Sout Nigeria, directed by the late Dr Leen, C.S.Sp., and nursed by th Dominican Sisters of Cabra, this new Missionary Congregation he developed and spread rapidly. Devoted to educational, social an medical work of all kinds, it has shown the adaptability necessar for work in the African Mission fields. One of its latest ventures to take over a large native hospital in Johannesburg. This is of more example of the Church's unfailing fecundity in supplying th needs of the Missions and of the apostolic zeal of the Irish. Me this record help to bring the sisters the spiritual and temporal hel they need in their great work!

D.M.