The Contributors

CHRIS ANDERTON is a Senior Lecturer in Popular Music at Southampton Solent University. He received his PhD from Swansea University in 2007 and has published journal articles and book chapters examining British music festivals, not-for-profit bootlegging and Italian progressive rock. He is currently working on the co-edited book, Understanding the Music Industries, for Open University/McGraw-Hill.

ANDY BIRTWISTLE is Principal Lecturer in Film Radio and Television Studies at the Department of Media, Canterbury Christ Church University. His book, Cinesonica: sounding film and video, is published by Manchester University Press. He is also a practising sound artist, whose work has been broadcast and exhibited internationally.

LORI BURNS is Professor of Music and Vice Dean for Research of the Faculty of Arts at the University of Ottawa. Her work on popular music has been published in leading journals, edited collections and in monograph form (Disruptive Divas, Routledge). Her current program of research, with co-investigator Marc Lafrance, entitled 'Subjectivity, embodiment, and resistance in popular music by female artists', is funded by the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada (2007–2010).

EMILY I. DOLAN is an Assistant Professor of Music at the University of Pennsylvania. Her research focuses on issues of timbre, orchestration and instrumentality. In particular, she is interested in the intersections between music, science and technology. She is completing a book, The Orchestral Revolution: Haydn and the Technologies of Timbre, 1750–1810.

ED MONTANO teaches on a popular music history course at Macquarie University in Sydney, works in music retail, and writes for the Australian dance music website www.inthemix.com.au. He has an MA in Popular Music Studies from the Institute of Popular Music at the University of Liverpool and a PhD on the commercial Sydney dance music scene from Macquarie University.

JENNIFER SHRYANE has taught Performance Arts since 1969 and for the last 15 years has been an examiner in this field. Her PhD study on Einstürzende Neubauten (University of Chester/Liverpool) was successfully completed in 2009. Her current research interests are German Populäre Musik (e.g. Abwärts, Ton Steine Scherben, Die Tödliche Doris), the performing body within this context and Artaud. Her book, Einstürzende Neubauten and German Experimental Music, is forthcoming from Ashgate.

PETER STANFIELD is Director of Film Studies at the University of Kent, and author of Body & Soul: Jazz & Blues in American Film, 1927–63 (2004), Horse Opera: The Strange History of the Singing Cowboy (2002), Hollywood, Westerns and the 1930s: The Lost Trail (2001), and joint-editor of Mob Culture: Hidden Histories of the American Gangster Film (2005), and 'Un-American' Hollywood: Politics & Film in the Blacklist Era (November 2007). His monograph Maximum Movies: Cinephilia & the Postwar Action Film is forthcoming.

JADA WATSON holds a BA and MA in Music History, and is completing a Master's in Information Studies at the University of Ottawa. Her research interests include issues of gender and geography in country music, and intersections of music and politics. She has presented papers on these topics at national and international conferences.
