In Memoriam

Carlton Clymer Rodee

Carlton Clymer Rodee, professor emeritus of political science at the University of Southern California, died in Pasadena on 27 September 1973. He was seventy-four years of age and had been a USC faculty member for thirty-five years prior to his retirement in 1967.

Born and raised in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, Carlton did his baccalaureate and master's degree at Madison and took his Ph.D. at Yale, where he was a Cowles Fellow.

Carlton Rodee's entire teaching career was at USC. After a short term in the School of Public Administration, he was promoted to an associate professorship in political science and public administration, and in 1948, to a full professorship in political science. His leadership in the Department of Political Science was unmistakable; in fact, he served as Chairman twice, 1937-1947 and 1954-1957.

His faculty leadership at USC was evidenced in other ways as well. He was active in the American Association of University Professors and the so-called faculty uprising ("Revolt '46"). He was one of the founders of the Faculty Senate and elected Vice Chairman in 1956-1957.

As a political scientist, he spanned all levels of professional organization: International Political Science Association; the California Fulbright Commission from 1959-1966; the American Political Science Association; the Western Association; the Board of Editors of the Western Political Quarterly for a number of years; and the Southern California Association, one of its founders and President, 1951-1953. In addition, over the years, he served in a number of civic capacities, such as a member of the panel for the Western Region of the War Labor Board during World War II and as a member of the team which surveyed the University of Nevada in 1956.

As a scholar, Dr. Rodee's major writings were closely related to his teaching. He was editor and co-author of Problems of Democratic Society, 1941, and Twentieth Century Political Thought, 1946. He was principal architect and co-author of Introduction to Political Science, 1957. He was a contributor to the Encyclopedia of the Social Sciences, Collier's Encyclopedia and to a number of academic journals.

Professor Rodee's great strength was his teaching. He was unusually effective even with large undergraduate classes. Many years after these classes, his former students bring up his name as "my most memorable professor." The graduate students whose doctoral work Professor Rodee chaired, regard themselves as his personal products. Each pridefully speaks of himself as a "Rodee man." They mention his idealism and his inspirational qualities; they even refer approvingly to his perfectionist traits. He came by his idealism ancestrally; his namesake was George Clymer, signer of both the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution.

Carlton's colleagues in the Department and throughout the University of California held him in high regard and received continuing inspiration and guidance from him following his retirement. His family survives him: his widow, Frances Fritz, whom he married as an undergraduate, and their daughter, Georgia (Mrs. Gayle E. Post).

Wayne A. Wilcox

Wayne A. Wilcox, together with his wife Ouida and children Kailan and Clark, was killed in the mid-air explosion of the Turkish airliner outside Paris on March 3, 1974. He was forty-one years old. Two other children, Shelley and Spencer, survive, as do Wayne Wilcox's mother and brother and Ouida Wilcox's mother.

Wayne Wilcox became chairman of Columbia University's Department of Political Science in the autumn of 1968, at a most difficult and painful moment, when both the Department and the University at large were still deeply divided into angry camps in the aftermath of
