MUSICAL EXPERIENCE IN TUMBUKA HEALING

Steven M. Friedson

“This is everything that a contemporary ethnography should be: well written, compelling, modestly experiential. Friedson brings experience and analysis into a highly productive dynamic tension, elegantly demonstrating the power and sophistication of a radically empirical phenomenological approach to anthropology.”

—Paul Stoller, West Chester University

OF
LA
(CAMEROON COAST)

RALPH A. AUSTEN

The epic of Jeki la Njambè has been performed among the Duala and related peoples of the Cameroon coast since at least the mid-nineteenth century and recorded in several indigenous, French and German texts in more recent times. The Elusive Epic contains English translations in whole or part of ten different versions of Jeki ranging from virtuoso performances with back-up troupes through family storytellers to Negritude poetry and contemporary pop music. The first half of the book discusses the epic as both a cultural and historical artifact although neither the contents nor local understandings of the epic link Jeki la Njambè to the very well known regional history of Atlantic commerce and Duala hegemony.

Coming to the World May 1, 1997

African Studies Quarterly

The Electronic Journal of the Center for African Studies at the University of Florida

African Studies Quarterly is an interdisciplinary, fully-refereed, publication. While there are many other publishing outlets which focus on scholarly writings concerning Africa, what distinguishes ASQ is its distribution method and its content. It is an ELECTRONIC journal.

- First, it is the first journal of its kind in the US and just the second internationally (after the University of Bradford, UK, International Journal of African Studies).
- Second, it is accessible to a growing number of scholars and institutions around the world with World Wide Web access. Many scholars and institutions cannot afford the exorbitant subscription rates of most journals.
- Third, the electronic format allows for a very rapid turnaround. ASQ in tends only a three month lag from submission, to review, to publication. This means that the journal can carry scholarly writing of a time-sensitive nature. In this way, it is likely to become somewhat of a hybrid between serial commentaries and scholarly publications. As a bonus, there is a certain satisfaction to be had by the authors in seeing an article "go to print" so rapidly.
- Finally, the electronic format means that access is unlimited, and it will cultivate an Africa-based audience. Readership need not be bound by distribution counts or limits. What's more, the readers themselves need not be African Studies scholars.

An electronic journal may be read by any global citizen with a computer, and it will seek to present an even-handed picture of Africa, whether the reader was motivated to access by seeing starving refugees in Zaire, a picture of the late Jean-Bedel Bokassa on his golden throne or an inspiring speech by Nelson Mandela or Bishop Desmond Tutu. This sort of popular involvement is perhaps the single most important communication goal we ought to seek as students and scholars of African Studies. The inaugural issue of the journal will be published on the World Wide Web May 1, 1997.

The Arts of Africa An Annotated Bibliography

compiled by Janet Stanley

Smithsonian Institution Libraries
National Museum of African Art Branch

Praised by reviewers as "a splendid resource," and "a model for future bibliographies in the field of African art," The Arts of Africa is an outstanding resource on African visual arts, architecture and material culture. Entries indexed by subject and author are selected for substance, significance and originality. The thoughtful annotations are invaluable for researchers or collection purchasers.

Along with obvious topics of sculpture, painting, graphics, architecture, dress and body arts, textiles and rock art, The Arts of Africa includes publications on African material culture, which go beyond "art" narrowly defined. Thus, topics include ironworking technology, archaeological pottery, economics of craft production, musical instruments, performance and graphic systems. Similarly, publications on the image of the Black in art, representations of the "other," and the influence of African art on non-African art are included.
