STORIES FROM THE SKELETON

Behavioral Reconstruction in Human Osteology

Robert Jurmain

San Jose State University, California, USA

Central theoretical issues regarding behavioral reconstruction in human osteological research are raised in this analytical volume. Because behavioral reconstructions have become increasingly common, especially within paleopathology, the scientific basis for such an approach must be reviewed.

For example, osteological scenarios seeking to link the onset of such skeletal conditions as osteoarthritis, dental disease, and trauma with specific behaviors in past populations are critically examined. Questions are also raised as to the scientific rigor of such hypotheses, the ethnohistoric evidence used to support them, and, ultimately, the soundness of such claims. In addition, commentary is included that broadens the scope to include anthropology and to explain the utility of behavioral reconstructions in paleoanthropology and the biocultural perspective as it is used in contemporary anthropology.

Selected Contents: Of Science and Stories • Osteoarthritis: Clinical and Osteological Approaches • Osteoarthritis and Activity: Occupational and Sports Studies • Osteoarthritis: Anthropological Interpretations • Enthesopathies and Other Osteological Indicators of Activity Trauma • Studies of Bone Geometry: The Shape of Things to Come? • Defining the Limits of Interpretation

Interpreting the Remains of the Past, Volume 1

ABOUT THE SERIES

The Interpreting the Remains of the Past book series is edited by Mary K. Sandford, Department of Anthropology, University of North Carolina, Greensboro, USA. Interdisciplinary and innovative, this timely series presents research that challenges physical anthropologists and archaeologists to reevaluate many assumptions about past cultures. It provides an outlet for disseminating information about innovative theoretical perspectives and research methods in contemporary archaeology and physical anthropology. Volumes in this series focus on new interpretive models and analytical techniques that have a direct bearing on our understanding of past human cultures and civilizations.

Drawing from the latest research in bioarchaeology, skeletal biology, zooarchaeology, palynology, ethnobotany, paleopathology, archaeometry, scientific visualization, computer modeling and statistical methodology, volumes in the series meet the needs of researchers and students alike.
