LUTHER AND THE OLD TESTAMENT

by Heinrich Bornkamm

"I am most enthusiastic about this book . . . it presents Luther's views of the Scriptures in as full and clear a manner as I have ever seen."

Robert E. Bornemann, Lutheran Theological Seminary, Philadelphia, Pa.

Professor Bornkamm sets forth Luther's basic concept of the Old Testament. He clarifies the relation between the Testaments, stressing their unity in terms of the identity between the Old Testament God and the Father of Jesus Christ, and between the Old Testament congregation of believers and the church: Moses was a Christian!

The author's keen insight into the Reformer's theological motivation enables him to clarify Luther's divergence from modern biblical scholarship, but also his continuing significance for it, and to see Luther's utterances on Judaism in terms of his basic theological concern. $6.75

PATTERNS OF REFORMATION

by Gordon Rupp

This book will be of great interest to students of Renaissance and Reformation history. It interprets the sixteenth century Reformation through biographical studies of four men: Oecolampadius, Karlstadt, Müntzer, and Vadianus. Writing with proverbial wit and clarity, the author takes into account the sociological, political, and Marxist interpretations of the period. $9.50

Ecclesiastical Authority and Spiritual Power in the Church of the First Three Centuries

Hans von Campenhausen

Translated by J. A. Baker. The problem of authority—what kind of authority is allowable within the Church, where does it reside—is one of the major issues dividing Christians today, and one of the most intractable. The Christian community is at all times determined on the one hand by faith in Christ and on the other by the reality of his Church. The Person of Christ and the practice of the Early Church as mirrored in the New Testament are of primary importance to an understanding of the problem of authority; a proper grasp of the developments of the first Christian centuries is equally vital. This work, by reason of its sensitive and balanced evaluation of all the relevant data, is far and away the most valuable in print on the relation between authority and divine inspiration. For this English edition, the author has made numerous additions and revisions to the recent German edition. $8.95

The Fathers of the Latin Church

Hans von Campenhausen

Translated by Manfred Hoffmann. A Reissue. Originally published in the United States in 1965 as Men Who Shaped the Western Church. "Likely to appeal to the general reader who is interested in the development of Christian theology. . . . This is a useful summary of the teaching of Tertullian, Cyprian, Lactantius, Ambrose, Jerome, Augustine, and Boethius, with vivid pen-portraits of the men themselves set in the context of their times."—Church Times (London). "Every chapter in the book is of the highest caliber. . . . For the specialist . . . von Campenhausen is provocative and stimulating. For the general reader . . . von Campenhausen is exciting reading."—Church History. $6.50
