BETWEEN CULT AND HISTORY

ADRIAAN H. BREDERO

"Adriaan Bredero has accomplished a rare feat in presenting current research on a key figure of the twelfth century, Saint Bernard of Clairvaux, for a broader public. . . . Of particular interest for readers will be Bredero's discussion of the expansion of the Cistercian order during Bernard's lifetime as contrasted with the later history of the order."

— UTA-RENAME BLUMENTHAL
Catholic University of America

"In this book Bredero sums up a lifetime of scholarship. He is a skilled interpreter of texts and a bold formulator of hypotheses. He has a flair for conjecturing the less obvious motivations of the figures he studies. His bibliography and notes are thorough and up-to-date."

— HUGH FEISS, O.S.B., in Speculum

"Bredero has produced a book that summarizes his lifelong preoccupation with the greatest saint of the twelfth century. . . . A magisterial overview, intended to make Bernard (and his vitae) more approachable."

A History of Heaven

The Singing Silence

Jeffrey Burton Russell

Well-known for his historical accounts of Satan and hell, Jeffrey Burton Russell here explores the brighter side of eternity heaven. He provides a history of how the joy of paradise has been conceived by writers, philosophers, and artists for whom heaven was an imminent reality.

Using current scholarly insights together with a vast store of knowledge gathered from the past, Russell takes the idea of heaven as valid and important in itself.

"Jeffrey Russell knows more about heaven than anyone except Saint Peter. . . . Anyone interested in religion of any kind will prize this book. It is an exhilarating read."

—Alan E. Bernstein, University of Arizona

"Jeffrey Burton Russell once observed that an adequate general history of heaven had yet to be written for a contemporary audience. Students of the history of Christianity should rejoice that he has taken up the task with his customary gusto and learning."

The Journey of the Magi

Meanings in History of a Christian Story

Richard C. Trexler

Matthew's Gospel reveals little about the three wealthy visitors said to have presented gifts to the infant Jesus. Yet generations of Christians have embellished that image of the Three Kings or Magi for a myriad of social and political as well as spiritual purposes. Here Richard Trexler closely examines how this story has been interpreted and used throughout the centuries. He explains in particular how Western societies have molded the story to describe and augment their own power—before the infant God and among themselves.

"Richard Trexler attempts to construct the kind of global account of an originally sacred Christian story that is sorely needed by many contemporary historians, cultural and otherwise. He explores a strikingly wide variety of times, places, and social milieus in a study that is broad, ambitious, and concerned both with deep structures and powerful historical change."—Paul H. D. ## Violence and Daily Life

Reading, Art, and Polemics in the Cîteaux Moralia in Job
Conrad Rudolph

The twelfth-century manuscript of Gregory the Great's Moralia in Job, lavishly written and illuminated at the Cistercian monastery of Cîteaux in 1111, contains images of seemingly gratuitous violence and daily life that are famous but have a significance that has eluded most modern viewers. Conrad Rudolph argues that beyond the face value of these illuminations, there lies an undercurrent of thematic consistency. Like obscure events from Scripture, he maintains, the images may lead to another level of meaning yet to be discovered.

"Conrad Rudolph offers a wonderful reading of the images. He is singularly qualified to undertake the project because of his immersion in the writings of the Cistercians and his awareness of the specific historical and intellectual moment within which the manuscript was created. This book will interest readers from a variety of fields, including art history, history, and religious studies."

Portals, Pilgrimage, and Crusade in Western Tuscany

Dorothy F. Glass

In this lucid and well-documented examination of nine lintels of churches in western Tuscany, all dating from the second half of the twelfth century, Dorothy Glass places the region in the context of international pilgrimage and crusade. With a seasoned eye and an extensive historical knowledge, Glass considers the iconography, style, and meaning of architectural sculpture in and around Pisa, Lucca, and Pistoia—sites at the nexus of medieval trade, travel, and pilgrimage.

Glass delves into such matters as the relationship between the visual arts and medieval theater, Italian settlements in the Latin East, trade routes, relics, and the revival and uses of pagan antiquity.

"Dorothy Glass covers little known and scantily published material which is of the utmost interest and importance. Her interpretations are entirely new and will interest not only the art historian but the cultural historian, and students of liturgical drama and church history."—Deborah Kahn, Boston University
