THE RE-EMERGENCE OF THE CHINESE PEASANTRY

Edited by Ashwani Saith, Institute of Social Studies, The Hague

The re-emergence of the peasantry is perhaps the most interesting development in China at the present time. After years of being subject to collective agriculture and other revolutionary experiments, China's peasants are now once again being encouraged to work their land in family units and to work for profits for themselves.

This new development, which reverses much that has happened in rural China since the Communist takeover, and which runs counter to established Communist theory and practice, is turning out to be a tremendous success.

This book, based on extensive original research, examines these most recent developments in rural China in all their many aspects. It examines the extent of the new trends, surveys the underlying thinking and discusses their implications and likely impact on wider Chinese society and Chinese Marxist thought.

The history of China in the twentieth century is a dramatic record of civil war, invasion, and economic and social revolution. There is no better source for the study of these eventful years than the Central Files of the U.S. State Department. The reports of American diplomatic personnel throughout China and the Far East are an outstanding set of primary research materials on every facet of modern Chinese history, containing over 275,000 pages of special reports, confidential correspondence, interviews, minutes of meetings, and translated documents. Published in cooperation with the National Archives and Records Administration, these files document in extensive detail the political, military, economic, social, and foreign affairs of China from 1930 through 1954. No other research collection matches the historical range, the in-depth analysis, and the exhaustive treatment of these files.
