The International Security Programme is one of the seven research programmes based at the RIIA. Headed by Professor Trevor Taylor, the programme endeavours to address questions and problems of International Security arising, in particular, from the collapse of the Soviet bloc and the subsequent end of the Cold War.

If you would like to receive information about the programme's current research projects, please contact Emma Matanle, Programme Assistant, International Security Programme at the above address.

MAGAZINES FOR LIBRARIES

The British Journal of Political Science

Coverage

Based in Britain but not restricted to Britain in either subject matter or contributors, British Journal of Political Science is written for a professional, international readership. Contributions to the journal cover all branches of political science including international relations and strategic studies and it frequently includes articles from scholars in related disciplines (sociologists, social psychologists, anthropologists, economists and philosophers). Only the history of political thought is excluded.

Review Articles

Review Articles are an important feature in each issue. They discuss at length some important new book or subfield of the discipline and are long enough to give the author room to develop his or her own argument. Recent topics have been Thatcherism, Northern Ireland, electoral change, privatisation and critical theory in international relations.

Editorial Policy

The British Journal of Political Science is an independent journal whose policy is set by its editorial board. It is committed to no methodological orthodoxy over and above the normal canons of scholarship: clear and consistent use of words, logical and mathematical validity, and the use of appropriate evidence to substantiate empirical statements. Contributions are published in all fields of political science. Work addressed to problems of general significance to students of politics is published whatever the period(s) or place(s) drawn upon for evidence. The journal is invaluable reading for all those interested in the subject whether from a purely political science viewpoint or because their discipline meets and interacts with political science.

From recent issues

International Affairs

International Affairs is Britain's leading journal of international relations. Founded by and edited at the Royal Institute of International Affairs in London, International Affairs is a lively, provocative journal of debate which will keep you up to date with critical thinking on the key questions and issues shaping world developments. Published in Europe, it has developed a valuable window onto European policy debates as well as covering global policy issues.

It provides a stimulating and international mix of authors and draws on the best of both English-language and foreign-language debates. Articles are commissioned from a wide range of authoritative and interesting writers who have something new and original to say about topics that matter. All articles are fully refereed.

International Affairs articles are written with the general as well as the specialist reader in mind. They avoid technical jargon and provide a lucid exposition of complex issues.

It has long been acclaimed for its extensive book review section. You will find: • Over 150 book reviews in each issue • A complete listing of other books received • Reviews indexed by author, and also sorted into specialised groups such as International Relations, Organizations, Politics, Social issues and Law, Economics, Development, Energy and Environment, Security and Arms Control, History, and regional sections.

"International Affairs is always stimulating and timely... Essential reading for anyone in charge of deciphering events of major importance and keeping up with the increasingly rapid changes on the globe."

Takashi Inoguchi, Professor of Political Science, University of Tokyo

"International Affairs has for over half a century been the pre-eminent British periodical dealing with international politics... No library on International Relations can afford to be without it."

Sir Michael Howard

"Indispensable if one wants to get access to the best of European analysis of international politics."

Professor Karl Kaiser, Director, Forschungsinstitut der Deutschen Gesellschaft für Auswärtige Politik, Bonn

"International Affairs is an invaluable source of in-depth analysis and background information on the fast-moving events in Europe and the wider world."

Edward Mortimer, Associate Editor, Financial Times (London)

"International Affairs has the best book review section of any journal in the field. Many people subscribe to it for that reason alone."

Barry Buzan, Chairman, British International Studies Association

"There are few better journals for keeping in touch with new literature."

Professor Lawrence Freedman, King's College London

"International Affairs is one of the most useful, informative and stimulating journals dealing with world politics. There are very few that are almost invariably interesting and indispensable to the enlightened public as well as to scholars; International Affairs is among these."

Professor Stanley Hoffmann, Centre for European Studies, Cambridge, Massachusetts

Notes for contributors

Manuscripts

The Editor welcomes submission of material for consideration as a main article or as a review article. The approximate length required for main articles is 8000 words, and for review articles 4000 words. The Review is a refereed journal, and contributors should allow time for the process of refereeing to take place.

THREE copies of the manuscript should be submitted to DR RICHARD LITTLE, DEPARTMENT OF POLITICS AND INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS, LANCASTER UNIVERSITY, LANCASTER LA1 4YL, ENGLAND. Manuscripts should be typed on one side of the paper only with generous margins and should be double spaced throughout. A short biographical note (appropriate for Notes on contributors) should accompany the manuscript.

References and notes

These should be amalgamated and signalled serially within each article by superscript numerals. The references and notes themselves should be typed on separate sheets at the end of the article. References should give full bibliographical details, including place of publication but not publisher, at first mention. Thereafter the author's surname and a short title should be used (not op. cit.). A cross-reference to the original citation, e.g. '(see n. 4 above)', may also be added if the short title reference is not immediately clear. The title of an article should appear in single inverted commas; the title of a book or journal should be underlined. Main words should be capitalized in article and book titles.

References and notes should be typed in the form of the following examples:

1. M. Richter, The Politics of Conscience (London, 1964), pp. 269–70.
2. Ibid. p. 281.
3. Gareth Stedman Jones, 'History: The Poverty of Empiricism', in R. Blackburn (ed.), Ideology in Social Science (London, 1972), pp. 96–8.
4. New York Times, 13 May 1987.
5. Stedman Jones, 'History', p. 99.
6. J. P. Cornford, 'The Illusion of Decision', British Journal of Political Science, 4 (1974), pp. 231–43.

Subheadings

Contributors are encouraged to include up to two levels of subheading in articles to provide 'signposts' for readers. They should be typed flush left with only the first word and any proper names capitalized.

General

First proofs may be read and corrected by contributors provided that they can give the editor a current address and can guarantee to return the corrected proofs, by airmail where appropriate, within three days of receiving them.

Authors of articles and review articles will receive twenty-five free offprints. Additional copies may be ordered on the form provided which must be returned at proof stage.

Contributors of accepted articles will be asked to assign their copyright, on certain conditions, to the British International Studies Association so that their interests may be safeguarded.

Review of International Studies

Aims and Scope

The aim of the Review of International Studies is to promote the analysis and understanding of international relations. Its scope is wide-ranging both in terms of subject matter and method. The Review is designed to serve the needs of students and scholars interested in every aspect of international studies, including the political, economic, legal, historical, cultural, technological and ethical dimensions of the subject. It is receptive to the extensive array of methodologies now employed in the humanities and the social sciences and wishes to draw on the expertise of other disciplines, such as sociology and psychology, to throw light on the study of international relations. Each issue contains research papers on specialized topics and review articles on recent literature in a specific field.

The Review was established in 1975 as the British Journal of International Studies and it took its present title in 1981. It is the official journal of the British International Studies Association and is published quarterly in January, April, July and October.

The British International Studies Association

The British International Studies Association was established in 1975 to encourage the teaching and research of international studies in Britain and to promote contact with scholars working in this field in other countries. The Association holds an annual conference and organizes study groups which meet throughout the year. It has a close working relationship with similar organizations in other countries and has established links with the standing group for international relations in the European Consortium for Political Research. The Association publishes the Review of International Studies and a series of monographs on international relations with Cambridge University Press. Members of the Association receive a copy of each issue of the Review and a regular newsletter. Membership is open to individuals and institutions of any nationality and applications for membership of the Association should be sent to the Secretary, c/o the Editor of the Review.

The BISA Prize

The British International Studies Association has established the BISA Prize of £200 to be awarded annually for the best article published in that year's Review of International Studies. The judging will take place during the autumn of each year, and the prize will be awarded at the annual conference of BISA.
