The John Doe Associates

Backdoor Diplomacy for Peace, 1941

R. J. C. Butow

This is the hitherto untold story of the secret, and in the end, damaging efforts of an American priest, a Japanese banker, and an Imperial Army colonel—dubbed the “John Doe Associates”—to avert war in the Pacific. Over a period of many months these men, headed by Father John Drought of Maryknoll, engaged in a persistent and often successful campaign to shape the diplomatic conversations taking place in Washington between Secretary of State Hull and Ambassador Nomura. Drought represented himself as the spokesman for a group of moderate Japanese leaders who allegedly wished to reach an agreement with the United States. In Nomura, Drought and his colleagues found a willing ally—a bluff naval officer, without diplomatic experience, who failed to recognize that he was dealing with men whose zeal outmatched their influence and capabilities. During 1941 at least sixty meetings took place between Nomura and the highest American authorities concerned with the conduct of foreign affairs. Each and every proposal offered by the two sides can be traced directly to a “Draft Understanding” Drought had given Hull in early April—a John Doe creation pure and simple, written at the Wardman Park Hotel in Washington, D.C. The private maneuvers and activities of the John Doe Associates caused a series of misunderstandings and confusion that exacerbated an already tense situation. The story of their intrusion into decision-making and policy formation adds a new dimension to the diplomatic prelude to the disaster at Pearl Harbor. Illustrated. $16.95

The story of Kashmiri Bronzes is the most recent and, perhaps, the most exciting development in the history of Indian art. The Rajatarangini, the twelfth century saga of Kashmiri kings written by the historian Kalhana is replete with allusions to the marvellous bronzes that adorned the numerous temples built by the royalty as well as the nobility. And yet only in the last two decades have we been made aware of the great tradition of Kashmiri bronzes.

Buddhist Monastic Discipline

The Sanskrit Prātimokṣa Sūtras of the Mahāsāṃghikas and Mūlasarvāstivādins

Charles S. Prebish

Two significant Buddhist monastic disciplinary texts are, for the first time, translated into English. They are printed on facing pages for ease of comparison. One of the texts is that of a very early Buddhist school first appearing in the 4th century B.C., and the other is one not mentioned in the records until the 7th century A.D. The contrasting texts thus highlight the development of Buddhist sectarian practices.

Two introductory chapters precede the translated Sūtras. The first gives an overview of the rise of Buddhist monasticism; analyzes Vinaya, that portion of the Buddhist canon regulating the life of monks and nuns; and provisionally identifies the problematics inherent in Prātimokṣa study, pointing the way to needed research. The second chapter describes how the two translated Sūtras were found and edited.

The Buddhist Teaching of Totality

Garma C. C. Chang

The Hwa Yen school of Mahayana Buddhism bloomed in China in the 7th and 8th centuries A.D. Today many scholars regard its doctrines of Emptiness, Totality, and Mind-Only as the crown of Buddhist thought and as a useful and unique philosophical system and explanation of man, world, and life as intuitively experienced in Zen practice.

For the first time in any Western language Garma Chang explains and exemplifies these doctrines with references to both oriental masters and Western philosophers. The Buddha's mystical experience of infinity and totality provides the framework for this objective revelation of the three pervasive and interlocking concepts upon which any study of Mahayana philosophy must depend.
