CHANGES WITHIN A DISCIPLINE

Everyone approaches a problem from a different angle. Some jump right into the middle of it. Some find they have loose ends that don't fit. And some come out on top of the problem. Political scientists know the story: one person will attempt to build a structural framework and make the specifics fit, and another will take the specifics and builds a structure. Regardless of style all political theorists try to keep abreast of current theories and methodology. THE PRENTICE-HALL texts on political theory are published with this in mind. Variety of theory and method makes the discipline challenging.
