POLITICS AND PLANNERS

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT IN CENTRAL AMERICA

Gary W. Wynia, University of Minnesota

In this original work, the author explains the frequent failures of a new generation of economic planners in five Central American nations. Closely evaluated are the roles of both regional organization and foreign aid in helping—or hindering—national development programs. Wynia's book is the first to explore fully this basic conflict between political self-interest and successful economic planning.
240 pages November 1972 cloth $15.00

THE POLITICS OF INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATION

Edited—Leland M. Goodrich, Columbia University and David A. Kay, University of Wisconsin

This volume, issued simultaneously in cloth and paperback editions, includes many of the most insightful and lasting articles published in the 26-year history of the journal International Organization. Together, they provide an authoritative and broad overview of the politics of international organization since the institution of the United Nations. Examination copies are available. Include course name and expected enrollment.
592 pages March 1973 paper $3.95; cloth $15.00

SUBSIDIES AND OTHER GOVERNMENT SPENDING

Edited—C. Lowell Harriss, Columbia University

This book, and the symposium that spawned it, attempt to examine the extent to which land values tend to capture the benefits of subsidies and other government spending through market processes of capitalization, in spite of the intentions of legislatures. (Sponsored by the Committee on Taxation, Resources, and Economic Development—TRED.)
320 pages June 1973 cloth $10.00

METROPOLITAN FINANCING

THE MILWAUKEE EXPERIENCE, 1920-1970

Donald J. Curran, The Cleveland State University

The growth of the suburbs and the decay of the inner city is now a common pattern in American metropolitan areas. The author presents a valuable 50-year case study, helping us to gain much-needed perspective. Curran's conclusions are fresh, incisive, and directly pertinent to the broad problems facing all metropolitan areas in America.
