Selected Writings of Lu Xun

Edited and translated by Gladys Yang

---

Lu Xun (1881–1936) is the great writer of modern China. His striking stories and polemical articles, many of them written in the vernacular, helped to bring about a revolution in language as well as to prepare the way for the social and political changes that have now remade the country. Mrs Yang's selection will give English readers the flavour of this witty and courageous man, together with an insight into the 'silent China' of which and for which he wrote. 90p Oxford Paperbacks

Reflections on the May Fourth Movement

---

A Symposium

---

Edited by Benjamin I. Schwartz

---

Modern Chinese nationalism came of age on May 4, 1919, when more than 3,000 students endorsed a manifesto denouncing the decision of the Paris Peace Conference that the Japanese might remain in Shantung province. The demonstration erupted into violent action, sparked off demonstrations elsewhere, and constitutes a milestone in the development of national consciousness. Paper covers £2.25 Harvard

Chinese-English

---

C. H. Fenn

---

In this basic tool for the study of the Chinese language words are arranged in the alphabetical order of their romanized form. Six columns on each page present the characters in their various forms and the Peking tone of each; the radical; the phonetic; the usual translations, indications as to whether the character is colloquial or literary, and whether it is used as a classifier, numerator, or surname; other readings of the same character; and indications as to its frequency. Paper covers £2.50 Harvard
