Duty and Hypocrisy in Hegel's *Phenomenology of Mind

Jonathan Robinson

This study combines a general discussion of Hegelian themes with the first close commentary, explication, and testing of Hegel's discussion of morality in the Phenomenology of Mind. $12.50

Essays on Philosophy and the Classics

John Stuart Mill

Edited by J.M. Robson

Introduction by F.E. Sparshott

These essays, edited in the scholarly form that has won high acclaim for the earlier volumes of the Collected Works, provide eloquent testimony of Mill's lifelong interest in the ideals that informed nineteenth-century intellectual life and give context for an understanding of Mill's political, logical, and psychological thought.

$35.00

Leibniz: Perception, Apperception, and Thought

Robert McRae

This book attempts to give coherence to the elements of Leibniz' epistemology, scattered as they are throughout his writings, concentrating on his theory of perception as expression and as activity, and on his view of the role played by the senses and the understanding in the knowledge and experience of sensible phenomena.

$15.00

Decadence and Objectivity

Lawrence Haworth

This study examines two sharply contrasting models of social order – the leisure-oriented society and the work-oriented society. This provides the basis for a model of what Haworth calls an 'objective' society based on the ideals of responsibility, leisureliness, and professionalism. $12.50

The Grasshopper: Games, Life, and Utopia

Bernard Suits

The Grasshopper is not only a gamesman but also a philosopher of the highest order. By means of Socratic dialogue between the Grasshopper and his disciples Prudence and Skepticus, Suits presents a definition of games and a theory of utopia. The form of this remarkably engaging book is a game too, played with great skill.

With 15 original drawings by award-winning illustrator Frank Newfeld. $10.00
