THE NEW VAISYAS

Raymond L. Owens and Ashis Nandy

This research collaboration between anthropologist Owens and psychologist Nandy is not merely a case study of the economic, social and psychological roots of entrepreneurship (in Howrah, West Bengal), but an effort to set the particularistic findings of the study within the theory of entrepreneurial studies generally. Thus it focuses on entrepreneurship as it influences and is influenced by the larger processes of social change. (Tables) 205pp $12.95

Post-Mao China and U.S.-China Trade

Edited by Shao-chuan Leng

The death of Mao Tse-tung and the subsequent purge of the "Gang of Four" have ushered a new era in the People's Republic of China. Peking's current emphasis on pragmatism and economic development tends to give rise to high expectations of future trade between the United States and China as well as a move toward normalization of relations. The seven essays contained in this volume examine the complicated economic and political aspects of this timely issue. China's economic structure, patterns of economy, and political problems related to economy are discussed, as well as the international aspects of these issues. $9.95

Authority and the Individual in Japan

Citizen Protest in Historical Perspective

Edited by J. Victor Koschmann

In this volume twelve prominent Japanese scholars and critics discuss political authority in Japan and patterns of obedience and disobedience before and since World War II. They describe how traditional relationships between authority and the individual may be changing and ask what consequences that change may have for Japan's political development. Part one focuses on prewar authority and protest and three forms of resistance: Christianity, communism, and liberalism. Part two includes analysis and interpretation centering on the ethos, behavior, and political significance of citizen protest in postwar society. This latter part highlights two contrasting conceptions of a foundation for civic action: modernism, which emphasizes the need to create autonomous citizens who take political stands as individuals; and communalism, which stresses the community as a primary vehicle of political participation and resistance. This important collection of essays is essential reading for all students of Japanese history and society and a useful introduction to Japanese political thought for the general reader interested in authority and protest in modern societies.

The Asian in North America Stanford M. Lyman

Distinguished scholar Stanford M. Lyman has brought together from his own articles, essays and reviews, 15 years of pioneering research on the Chinese and Japanese in North America. Drawing on the social experience of Asian Americans, Lyman discusses the historical importance of their immigration to this continent.

Ivan Light, Associate Professor, Department of Sociology, University of California, Los Angeles, says,

"What is most remarkable about Lyman's essays is their conjuncture of prodigious historical scholarship and bold sociological imagination. . . . This project compelled him to defend the subject from bowdlerizers, filio-pietists, ideologists and antiquarians who wanted to trivialize it. Therefore, Lyman's research is a vindication of the humanistic significance of free sociological inquiry as well as a practical lesson in how to conduct it."

Southeast Asian Transitions

Approaches through Social History

edited by Ruth T. McVey

with the assistance of Adrienne Suddard

In six major essays written to honor the late Harry J. Benda, an international group of scholars focuses on a particular concern of Benda's—the impact of advanced colonialism on Southeast Asian societies and the attempt of the Southeast Asians to develop ideological and institutional responses. The authors have approached the subject from the angle of local history, showing through the study of significant small-scale events how people far from the centers of political power reacted to the pressures for change. $17.50
