

years, In 1987-88, for example, the APSR Book Review received 1,500 books and selected 418—28%—for review (Patterson, Ripley and Trish PS 1988, 912-13).

As Table 6 shows, the distribution of books reviewed is largely shaped by the distribution of books received in the various fields.

Concluding Comments

Whatever the difficulties and errors along the way, I hope and believe that the Review continues to publish the best of scholarship in political science. I am grateful to the Association and the Council for their support and to book review editor Melissa Collie and her team, associate editor Linda Lindenfelser, the 1992-93 APSR interns (Lynn Jarrell, Matt Gabel, Laura Stevens, and Frank Bell), copy editor Michael Lane, and the members of the APSR Editorial Board for all their strenuous efforts in making possible the accomplishments of the Review this year.

The AU/APSA program used its Washington, D.C., location to offer presentations not only by political scientists but also by politicians, federal officials, and journalists. Site visits were made to Congress, the National Archives, C-SPAN, the State Department, and Annapolis for a program on federalism and state government. James A. Thurber and Susan W. Hammond were the Institute's co-directors, Candace J. Nelson, the coordinator, and Sheilah Mann, the education director.

American University faculty contributing to the program as lecturers were: Laird Anderson, Christine Degregorio, Katherine Farquhar, and was entitled, "The Summer Institute in the American Political System." The participants were all faculty members in political science or law in colleges and universities in their home countries. There were 18 nations represented in the seminar, including five from Africa, three from Latin America, one from the Caribbean, one from the Middle East, one from Europe, two from Central Asian Republics with membership in the Commonwealth of Independent States, and five from Asia. Most of the participants were from nations undergoing fundamental regime or systemic transition, and several were emerging democracies.

Jackson (SIUC, Project Director).

The 18 faculty attending the institute at Southern Illinois University were:

- Sandra J. Pepera, University of Ghana, Ghana
- Zaure Karimovna Ayupova, Alma Ata State University, Kazakhstan
- Nipa Chaisavate, Prince of Songkhia University, Thailand
- Claudia Patricia Rodriguez Velez, Los Andes University-Bogota, Colombia
- Evadne Arlene Brewster, Barbados Community College, Barbados
- Yoga Jyotsna, Osmania University's Women's College, Hyderabad, India
- Ningrum Natasyia Sirait, University of North Sumatra, Indonesia

- Maria Eugenia Morales, University of Chile, Chile
- Leonardo Pablo Hekimian, Catholic University of Buenos Aires, Argentina
- Kholisani Solo, University of Botswana, Botswana
- Admore Mupoki Kambudzi, University of Zimbabwe, Zimbabwe
- Richard Okumu Wengi, Makerere University, Uganda
- Kapil Shrestha, Tribhuvan University, Nepal
- Winston Kwan Wan Ng, University of Hong Kong, Hong Kong
- Gordon Struthers Freer, University of the Witwatersrand, South Africa
- Alisher Rasulovich Baltaev, Tashkent State Law Institute, Uzbekistan
- Nenad Zakosek, University of Zagreb, Croatia
- Moh'd Mustafa, University of Jordan, Jordan

The seminar included five weeks in Carbondale with daily lectures on American Government and Politics and the American Legal System, with a special focus on the 1990 Clean Air Act as a case study of the policy-making and implementation process in the United States. Part of one week was spent at the state capital in Springfield and side trips were taken to St. Louis and Chicago for cultural enhancement.

Lectures were given by the following political science faculty at Southern Illinois University at Carbondale: John S. Jackson, Michael Esler, Barbara L. Brown, Ron Mason, David Kennedy, William Garner, William Turley, John L. Foster, John H. Baker, Manfred Landecker, David Derge, and Albert Melone.

The final week was spent in Washington, D.C. The seminar toured Capitol Hill and heard lectures on the House Judiciary Committee, the Senate Judiciary Committee, the Supreme Court, and the party caucuses in the House. A visit to the White House also included a briefing from Clinton Administration officials on intergovernmental relations, budgeting, and health care plans. The seminar participants also visited the Joint Center for Political and Economic Studies, the American Bar Association, the American Political Science Association, and the World Bank.

The USIA program is designed to provide these international faculty members with the latest knowledge in American politics as well as introducing state-of-the-art teaching materials. It is also designed to deepen the participants' understanding of American culture in general and the American political culture in particular. John S. Jackson, dean of the College of Liberal Arts, and Harry Haynsworth, dean of the School of Law, obtained the grant and led the seminar.

From the Executive Director

Dear APSA Members:

Our printer, the William Byrd Press, Inc., has reported the first year figures on the changes in the APSR.

As you remember, we enlarged the page size in order to reduce costs (especially to abate increasing future costs) and to increase the amount of text that could be accommodated by each issue. The larger trim size was not only to be cheaper but to allow us to ship the APSR and PS together in shrink wrap, resulting in postage savings and less damage to the journals in shipping. Another benefit was that tables and graphs could be presented in a more readable manner in the larger format.

Our expectations have been met. The APSR now prints the equivalent of 72 pages more per issue or 288 more per volume of the current size of the APSR, and 340 more pages or a full extra issue of the APSR in its former size. In dollar terms, this addition, conservatively estimated, is worth $15,557 to the Association. Even with the extra pages, we spent $2,392 less on printing this year than we would have under the old format. The plastic wrap and combined mailing save APSA another $12,800 per year.

In short, we have completely halted the seemingly inexorable forward march in our printing costs and have increased space in the journal at the same time. Not least, the journals arrive at doorsteps intact. For the additional authors whose books now get reviewed or for the political scientist whose article is published, the non-monetary value of the increased space is considerable.

Managing Editor Bing Powell has taken excellent advantage of the new possibilities of presenting tables and graphs in a readable fashion under the new format. He and PS Editor Rob Hauck have both been extraordinarily flexible in arranging their production schedules so that the two journals could be printed together.

Change is always difficult. We owe a special debt of gratitude to everyone who has worked to make this transition successful, in particular Bing Powell, Sheilah Mann, and Rob Hauck, and to everyone who preferred the old trim size but who tolerated the change.

Sincerely,
Catherine Rudder
