

From the Editor's Keyboard...

With this issue, we welcome five new Associate Editors: Najwa al-Qattan, Mine Çınar, Houman Sadri, Omid Safi, and Brannon Wheeler. I thank retiring Associate Editors Linda Darling, Fatemeh Moghadam, and Sami Ofeish for their excellent work on the Bulletin, and I look forward to working with the new Associate Editors, each of whom brings to the Bulletin not only their expertise, but their ideas and plans for future issues.

In addition to Laurie Brand's Presidential Address and synopses of some of the Thematic Conversations from MESA 2004, this issue contains essays and review essays on topics ranging from language instruction to the music of pearl divers in the Gulf, to sources for the study of Egypt, Iraq, Israel and Syria, along with 39 reviews of books, films, music and multi-media projects.

Over the next year and a half, we will be working on the Bulletin's volume 40, both issues of which will also serve to celebrate MESA's 40th anniversary. We plan for issues 40/1 and 40/2 to contain essays and reviews devoted to the 40th anniversary celebration, and welcome suggestions and submissions in line with this theme. Please contact me with your ideas, at bulletin@newpaltz.edu. Meanwhile, I hope you find this issue of the Bulletin both enlightening and entertaining.

"Succinct, elegant, and challenging...Its insights and the links it makes are illuminating, and help show that the divide between the West and its enemies is an old one." —The Economist

"The connections that Mr. Buruma and Mr. Margalit establish in their elegant, breezily erudite little book are striking. They have written a useful primer on the habits of mind that drive our most implacable foes....Accurate and fair-minded." —The New York Times

This "grandly illuminating study of two centuries of anti-Western ideas" (Foreign Affairs) traces the historical roots of a virulent set of stereotypes about

Westerners and the West, a cluster of notions and prejudices that Ian Buruma and Avishai Margalit call Occidentalism. The path does not lead back to Islam but, in fact, back to the West itself. From nineteenth-century Germany and Russia to twentieth-century Japan, China,

Southeast Asia, and the Middle East, Buruma and Margalit track the spread of these noxious ideas. Drawing on their formidable range of gifts of synthesis to place modern terrorists in a long continuum of enemies of Western liberal society, the authors have written a book of extraordinary clarity and wide-ranging elegance.
