Cyber Warfare: Critical Perspectives

Edited by

Paul Ducheine, Frans Osinga, Joseph Soeters

Next to sea, land, air and space, 'cyberspace' appears to be the fifth operational domain for the military. This manmade and virtual sphere brings along opportunities and threats. In this book, academics of the Netherlands Defence Academy as well as specialists and military professionals from other institutions analyse developments in cyber security. The authors use various fields of expertise, enabling them to apply a truly multi-disciplinary approach.

Cyber threats affect states' vital interests. By consequence, responses are required that need to come from public authorities as well as organisations on the market and in civil society. Additionally, this is not a national state's affair; cyber threats are an international concern.

This collection of essays questions the premises and scenarios on which policy responses are based. Are these scenarios describing real or imaginary threats? A number of contributions specifically deal with this issue.

This volume also covers the process of 'securitization', the legal aspects of cyber operations, the use of social media in military operations as well as an economic analysis of the costs of cyber dangers. Furthermore, the authors analyse organisational responses to cyber threats. Resilience is the central term in this respect, both at the individual and the organisational level of military HQs and strategic network management. An analysis based on operations research and game theory illustrates the vulnerabilities of digital networks. No matter how dangerous cyber threats may look at face value, one should not overdramatise the dangers, as the last chapters seem to imply.

In all contributions, the authors have attempted to combine academic theory with practical views and suggestions. This makes this book valuable not only for people from academic life, but particularly also for people who struggle with the intricacies and worries of cyber threats in their everyday (professional) life.

Colonel Paul Ducheine is associate professor of cyber operations at the Netherlands Defence Academy and a lecturer in military law at the University of Amsterdam.

Air-Commodore Frans Osinga is professor of military operational art and sciences at the Netherlands Defence Academy.

Joseph Soeters is professor of management and organisation studies at the Netherlands Defence Academy and at Tilburg University.

The Hague Journal on the Rule of Law is a multidisciplinary journal that aims to deepen and broaden our knowledge and understanding about the rule of law. Its two main areas of interest are: 1) theoretical issues related to the conceptualization and implementation of the rule of law in domestic and international contexts; 2) the relation between the rule of law and economic development, democratization and human rights protection. The HJRL welcomes contributions from academics and practitioners with expertise in any relevant field, including law, anthropology, economics, philosophy, political science and sociology.

The Hague Journal on the Rule of Law is supported by the Hague Institute for the Internationalisation of Law (HiIL). It is indexed by the Westlaw UK Legal Journals Index (LJI) and the Index to Foreign Legal Publications.

EDITORIAL POLICY & GUIDELINES FOR CONTRIBUTORS

The Hague Journal on the Rule of Law publishes two categories of articles: papers (approx. 6000–10.000 words) and notes (approx. 500–3000 words). Papers are accepted on the basis of double blind peer-review. Notes are accepted on the basis of review by two or more editors of the journal. Authors should feel free to make inquiries at the Editorial Office in case they consider writing a paper or a note. Authors are kindly requested to send their manuscript to the Editorial Office at any time of the year. All submitted materials should be in English. For detailed guidelines for manuscripts, contact the editorial office or see www.assertpress.nl/cata/hjrl/fra.htm or <http://journals.cambridge.org>.

Submission and publication elsewhere

Manuscripts submitted to the HJRL must not be under consideration for publication elsewhere. Acceptance of the Editorial Board's offer to publish, implies that the author agrees to an embargo on publication elsewhere for a period of two years following the date of publication in the HJRL. After this two-year period, the author may republish the article elsewhere, provided only that the author notifies the Publisher and ensures that the Publisher is properly credited and that the relevant copyright notice is repeated verbatim.

Revision, language-editing and copy-editing

Authors are responsible for the language-editing of their texts and copy-editing in conformity with the guidelines for authors. After acceptance of a text for publication, the fully edited and correct text must be sent to the Editorial Office within four weeks. Any (minor) changes to the text must also be made within this four-week period. Authors will not receive formatted proofs for correction.

Books for Review

Books for review and proposals to review books should be addressed to the Editorial Office.

Fees

Authors will not receive a fee, but will be presented a complimentary issue of the HJRL in which their contribution appears.
