THE CONTRIBUTORS

LAWRENCE STONE, Professor of History at Princeton University, specializes in English social history from 1460 to 1660, and his most recent book is The Crisis of the Aristocracy, 1558-1641. Before coming to the Princeton faculty in 1963 he was a Fellow of Wadham College, Oxford. He spent the academic year 1960-61 as a member of the Institute for Advanced Study in Princeton.

JAMES HEAPHEY, who is Associate Professor in the Graduate School of Public and International Affairs, University of Pittsburgh, served in 1965 as Senior Specialist at the East-West Center, University of Hawaii. He writes in the fields of comparative administration and administrative theory.

ROBERT A. PACKENHAM is Assistant Professor of Political Science and Research Associate in the Institute of Political Studies at Stanford University. His main field of interest is comparative politics. He is completing a book on foreign aid and political development, and is also working on a study of the national Congress in Brazil.

J. DAVID SINGER is Professor of Political Science at the University of Michigan and Research Political Scientist at its Mental Health Research Institute. His most recent book is Human Behavior and International Politics: Contributions from the Social-Psychological Sciences (1965). In addition to the "Correlates of War" project, he is working on a theoretical volume dealing with pattern and process in world politics.

MELVIN SMALL is Assistant Professor of History at Wayne State University and last year completed for the University of Michigan his doctoral dissertation, "The American Image of Germany, 1906-1914."

R. J. RUMMEL is Assistant Professor of Political Science at Yale, Director of the Dimensionality of Nations Project, and a staff member of the Yale Political Data Program. He is the author of two books to appear next year: Dimensions of Nations (with Jack Sawyer, Harold Guetzkow, and Raymond Tanter) and Applied Factor Analysis. His current research is in the development of a mathematical field theory relating interactions between nations to their political, economic, and social distances.

RICHARD DALE wrote his doctoral dissertation at Princeton University in 1962 on the evolution of the South West African dispute in the United Nations, and studied Afrikaans at the University of California (Los Angeles) in 1964 as a National Defense Foreign Language Fellow. Now Assistant Professor of Political Science at Northern Illinois University, he frequently reviews books on southern Africa and related topics for a variety of journals.

VINCENT P. ROCK, Director of the Program of Policy Studies in Science and Technology at The George Washington University, is the author of A Strategy of Interdependence (1964) and coauthor, with J. I. Coffey, of Presidential Staff (1961). A long-time student of national security policies, his current interest is the interaction of policy and technology, and he is now examining the implications of modern communications for political change.

LINCOLN P. BLOOMFIELD is Professor of Political Science and Director of the Arms Control Project of the Center for International Studies at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. His most recent book, Khrushchev and the Arms Race, will appear this year.
