Psychological Medicine publishes original research in clinical psychiatry and the basic sciences related to it. These comprise not only the several fields of biological inquiry traditionally associated with medicine, but also the various psychological and social sciences whose relevance to medicine has become increasingly apparent. Editorials and commissioned review articles are published regularly. The journal also carries an extensive book review section.

From 1982 supplements to the journal will be published and will be sent free to subscribers. The first two are entitled:

Sex differences in psychological well-being
by MONICA BRISCOE

and

Long-term community care: experience in a London borough
edited by J. K. WING
