Sociolinguistic Patterns in British English

edited by Peter Trudgill

Recent years have seen a striking increase in sociolinguistic investigation of the varieties of English spoken in Britain. This volume presents a selection of some of the best of this work. Apart from its obvious interest to lecturers and undergraduates concerned with the study of language in its social context, it provides a balanced reflection of sociolinguistic research and theory in Britain, making accessible to a wider audience advances in data collection and methodology.

These studies are based on empirical work on language as it is spoken in its social context and fall largely within the framework established by William Labov. The phenomena under consideration are the mechanisms of linguistic variability and the 'status' of forms of speech rather than the varieties of languages themselves. Variations in current vernacular English are linked to historical and psycho-social – including sexual – factors, and can only be identified and interpreted by close empirical observation of colloquial speech. The changes that are taking place under the influence of, for example, rural-urban interaction and upward social mobility, and the use of alternative speech-codes as appropriate to social circumstances, are documented here from varying age groups and social classes in Northern Ireland, Scotland and several areas of England.

Typescripts. The top copy of the typescript should be submitted and, if possible a second copy also. Contributions should be clearly typed on one side of the paper only using a conventional size of paper, preferably A4 (or 21.6 by 28 centimeters for those at work where A4 is not available). Authors should hold one copy for the correction of proofs. The title-page should include the title, author's name and affiliation, in that order, along with an abstract of the article. Areas of study to which the articles may be of interest should be listed at the end of the abstract.

Titles should be so worded that the first part may be used as a running headline (with a maximum length of 50 characters, including spaces). They should be typed on a separate sheet, together with the author's name and the address to which he wishes proofs to be sent.

Citations and forms of emphasis.

Normally the Latin alphabet is to be used. Cited forms should be underlined to represent italicization in print. Translational 'meanings' should be placed within single quotation marks.

References are to be made in the text (and not in footnotes) by giving in parentheses the name of the author and year of publication, and where relevant the page(s) referred to; e.g. (Whitney 1867: 45-53). If the author's name is part of the text, the following form should be used: 'Whitney (1867: 48) maintained that . . .'. When a work written by two or more authors is referred to, all names should be given in the first citation; e.g. (Weinreich, Labov & Herzog 1968): in subsequent citations the first name only should be given, with 'et al.' added; e.g. (Weinreich et al. 1968). When separate works are referred to in the same parentheses, those by the same author should be separated by commas and those by different authors by semi-colons: e.g. (Whitney 1867; Firth 1935, 1957a). Initials should be used (after the author's name) only when it is necessary to distinguish between two or more authors of the same name, all of whom are referred to in the same article.

All works referred to should be listed at the end of the article, double-spaced and in alphabetical order. The titles of articles should so far as possible be abbreviated according to the conventions of the Linguistic Bibliography of the Permanent International Committee of Linguistics (CIPL).

Book reviews. With the exception of the title-page, book reviews should be submitted in the same form as articles. The title-page should take the following form: Edwin Ardener (ed.), Linguistic and Social Anthropology. (ASA Monographs, 10.) London: Tavistock, 1971.
