Globalising Australian Capitalism

Bob Catley

This book traces the Australian economy from Federation to its inevitable downturn in the 1970s and assesses the current state of play. Topics include the inadequacies of the dual economy, the rise of economic rationalism, demographic and social repercussions of globalization and the implications for Australia in the emerging Asia-Pacific region.

Women's Work in Rural China Change and Continuity in an Era of Reform

Tamara Jacka

Since 1978, reform policies introduced in rural China have had a profound impact on women's work and gender divisions of labor. This book explains how and why these shifts in women's work patterns have come about, and how they relate to other aspects of women's position in society.

Productivity and Performance in the Paper Industry

Labour, Capital and Technology in Britain and America, 1860-1914

Gary Bryan Magee

Dr. Magee examines an important British industry that, like many others, declined in relative importance during the period prior to 1914. He compares Britain's performance in papermaking with its main international rivals – the time, America and Germany, addressing such central subjects as technological change, entrepreneurship and productivity.

Origins of Law and Economics

The Economists' New Science of Law, 1830-1930

Heath Pearson

In the 1830s, the "new science of law" aimed to explain the working rules of human society by using the methodologically individual terms of economic discourse. Practitioners were inclined to admit altruistic values, bounded rationality, and institutional inertia into their research programs. This positive analysis of law tended to push normative discussions up from the level of specific laws to society's political organization. Late-twentieth-century institutional economics is currently developing greater resemblances to this now-forgotten new science.

A History of Corporate Finance

Jonathan Baskin and Paul J. Miranti, Jr.

“Business corporations, once rare, have become the dominant organization of the modern economy. The corporation as we know it owes its existence to a long history of financial innovations—in institutions, markets, and instruments (securities). This is the first in-depth history to tell us how it all happened, from the merchants and bankers of medieval and Renaissance Italy to today’s corporate managers and wizards of Wall Street. Students of business, economics, finance, law, and history will learn much from it.”

GERMANS ON WELFARE

From Weimar to Hitler

DAVID F. CREW

"A major study on the Weimar Republic and on how millions of destitute Germans fared on welfare prior to the rise of Hitler. The author richly details the experiences of men and women at the grass-roots level of society, but also looks at their interaction with the policy-making authorities at the top. Methodologically innovative, this book will serve as a model for a new integrated socio-political history of modern industrial societies."

"[This] may be the most important study ever done of mid-nineteenth-century immigrant adjustment in the United States. Ferrie created a unique linked-data file to analyze in a creative way longitudinal changes in residence, occupational status, and assets. THE AGE OF MASS MIGRATION

An Economic Analysis

TIMOTHY J. HATTON and JEFFREY G. WILLIAMSON

"Men and women have always been willing to 'better themselves' through migration—when they could. The century or so before the First World War offered more Europeans the opportunity of doing so than ever before or since.... Timothy Hatton and Jeffrey Williamson, two of the best economic historians of their generation, apply their complementary skills to the production of an integrated and compelling analysis of this mass migration of over fifty million people. Combining theory and measurement, they offer a lively and persuasive interpretation of differences in the size and timing of migrant flows across Europe during this 'liberal interlude', and a powerful analysis of the consequences for the economies that received and sent them."—Cormac Ó Gráda, University College, Dublin

JOHN LAW

Economic Theorist and Policy-Maker

ANTOIN E. MURPHY

John Law (1671-1729) is most widely known outside economics as a rake, duelist, and gambler. This intellectual biography of the Scottish-born economic theorist and policy-maker depicts a significant thinker who flourished when economic conceptualization was very much at an embryonic stage. It also explains Law's ultimate failure.

"This is a very useful book for those seeking to understand the turbulent markets of the US in the 1980s. This period includes the deepest US recession since the Great Depression of the 1930s, the worst peacetime inflation experience this country has ever had, the highest interest rates, and some of the most severe upheavals ever seen in the financial sector. The book maintains a high scholarly level throughout, while at the same time showing a depth of understanding that only an active professional participant in the markets can give."

The Economics of World War II Six Great Powers in International Comparison

Mark Harrison, Editor

This book provides a new quantitative view of the wartime economic experiences of six great powers: the UK, the United States, Germany, Italy, Japan and the USSR. A chapter is devoted to each country, while the introductory chapter presents a comparative overview. It aims to provide a work of statistical reference for those interested in international and comparative economic history, the history of World War II, the history of economic policy, and comparative economic systems.

The Balkan Economies c.1800-1914

Evolution without Development
Michael Palairt

The Balkan Economies c. 1800-1914 is a strongly revisionist book that compares the economic progress of Serbia, Bulgaria, Bosnia, Montenegro and Macedonia in the century before World War One. Native language primary sources are used to argue that these territories probably experienced economic decline rather than growth, at least from the mid-nineteenth century. But far from hindering development, Ottoman rule made possible more progress than successive governments. This in-depth study promises to be the definitive economic history of the Balkans.

Redefining the State

Privatization and Welfare Reform in Industrial and Transitional Economies

Nicolas Spulber

Professor Spulber traces the role of the state in the West and East for more than two centuries along parallel lines—first from the creation of the Welfare State in the West, and the Party-State in the East, to reform of the Western Welfare State by means of privatization and entitlement changes, to transmutations in the East through large scale privatizations and the creation of the "nomenklatura capitalism." He establishes an original connection between dismantling state enterprises and limitation of government functions at all levels in the West, and the collapse and then restructuring of the state on new foundations in the East.

Escape from the Market

Negotiating Work in Lancashire

Michael Huberman

This book questions the conventional wisdom that in the heyday of laissez-faire capitalism wages were set by thorough going competition. Drawing on the experience of a key group of workers during industrialization, this book shows that even in the absence of trade unions, minimum wage legislation or unemployment insurance, wages do not always move with changes in the demand for and supply of labor. Workers and firms have good reasons to fix wages independently of market fluctuations.
