EXPLAINING WAR:

edited by J. DAVID SINGER, University of Michigan and Associates

with a Foreword by BRUCE M. RUSSETT

In the scholarly tradition of those who shed light on the causes that underlie a nation's decision to go to war—a tradition established by the work of Quincy Wright, Lewis F. Richardson, and Karl Deutsch—Singer and his associates in the Correlates of War project have taken a leading place. The project is one of the best-known and most productive of those which have sought during the last two decades to lay the foundations for a "science of peace and war." These collected essays, available now for convenient professional reference and student use, move us a step closer toward "explaining war."
