

HISTORY WORKSHOP

A twice yearly journal produced by a mixed collective whose concerns are with the fundamental elements of social life today and in the past. It combines major research articles with discussion of how history is produced and how it is used; reviews books, productions, and exhibitions, and announces and reports on meetings, events, publications.

Forthcoming issues will include:

Sexual harrassment in the 19th century cotton industry

Jan Lambertz

Crime and Total Institutions in the Making of Modern South Africa

Solidarity and Fragmentation

Working People and Class Consciousness in Detroit, 1875-1900

RICHARD OESTREICHER

Oestreicher argues that social change in Detroit can be understood neither in terms of the proletarianization and polarization predicted by classical Marxism nor as the struggle between tradition and modernity hypothesized by modernization theorists. Solidarity and fragmentation, he suggests, were intertwined parts of the same whole, both fundamental aspects of working-class experience.

"Solidarity and Fragmentation combines the virtues of a detailed local study with general insights into both the character of working-class consciousness in the 1880s and the nature of the controversies within the Knights of Labor. Among all the fine recent studies of the Knights, this is the one that most effectively links the questions emphasized by the more recent trends in social history to the issues of the older historiography. It is enormously helpful to those of us who have for so long been trying to sort out the complex evolution of the labor movement in the last two decades of the nineteenth century." — David Montgomery.
