

Letter to the Editor

Apologies are extended to Professor Debora Shuger and Professor Marc Fumaroli for extreme negligence in properly documenting their work in Stephen Campbell, "Nicolas Caussin's Spirituality of Communication: A Meeting of Divine and Human Speech," Renaissance Quarterly 46, no. 1 (Spring 1993): 44–70. The article should have been rightly cast as a dialogue with Professor Shuger's previous work on Caussin. A beginning note of indebtedness to her work was and is inadequate. Please refer to her book, Sacred Rhetoric: The Christian Grand Style in the English Renaissance (Princeton UP, 1988): 87–88, 136, 210, 227–31.

Additionally the description of the frontispiece to Caussin's work on hieroglyphics (Campbell, 50) should be noted explicitly as a translation of Fumaroli's description contained in his L'age d'eloquence (1980).

The contribution of these scholars to the study of Renaissance thought is held in high esteem, in fact, with reverence and gratitude. They cannot be denied the dignity of their own work and expression.
