

NOTES ON THE CONTRIBUTORS

JOSÉ DANIEL BENCLOWICZ has a doctorate in history from the University of Buenos Aires and is professor and researcher at the School of Humanities and Social Studies of the National University of Río Negro. He specializes in contemporary and recent Argentine history. His ongoing research projects are all connected to the study of the development of the working class, the emergence of the piquetero movement, and the role of social representations in the unfolding of social struggle.

AMY CHAZKEL is associate professor of history at the City University of New York, Queens College. A specialist in modern Brazilian history, her research and teaching interests include urban history, slavery and abolition, and law and society in Latin America. Her publications include Laws of Chance: Brazil's Clandestine Lottery and the Making of Urban Public Life in Brazil (Duke University Press, 2011), articles on the history of penal institutions and illicit gambling in Brazil, and a coedited double issue of Radical History Review that explores the privatization of common property in global perspective.

TIMOTHY DAVID CLARK is a doctoral candidate in the Department of Political Science at York University and research associate at the Centre for Research on Latin America and the Caribbean (CERLAC). He is also the co-editor of Canadian Mining Companies in Latin America: Community Rights and Corporate Social Responsibility. His research interests include Latin American political economy and development, state theory and capitalist development, mining and resource policy, and rural development and food security. His current project investigates the role of the state in the process of capitalist transformation in Chile under the Pinochet dictatorship.

KATHERINE J. CURTIS is assistant professor of community and rural sociology at the University of Wisconsin–Madison. Her research addresses migration and population redistribution, inequality, and population and environment in the United States and Puerto Rico, with a focus on spatial and temporal aspects underlying social processes. Her work has been published in Demography (2005, 2008), Caribbean Studies (2007), Population Research and Policy Review (2008), and Social Science History (2005).

RICHARD FEINBERG is professor of international political economy at the Graduate School of International Relations and Pacific Studies, University of California, San Diego. Previously, he served as special assistant to President Clinton for inter-American affairs on the National Security Council (1993–1996). He is the book reviewer for the Western Hemisphere section of the publication of the Council on Foreign Relations, Foreign Affairs. Feinberg received his doctorate in economics from Stanford University and his bachelor's degree from Brown University.

JUDITH ADLER HELLMAN is professor of political and social science at York University. She has been editor of Canadian Journal of Latin America and Latin American Research Review, Vol. 46, No. 2. © 2011 by the Latin American Studies Association.

Caribbean Studies and is the author of Mexico in Crisis (Holmes & Meier, 3rd ed., 1988), Journeys among Women: Feminism in Five Italian Cities (Oxford University Press, 1987), Mexican Lives (New Press, 2nd ed., 1999), and The World of Mexican Migrants (New Press, 2008), as well as articles on peasant movements, rural development, feminism, distance education, human rights, international migration in the Americas and Europe, and social movements in Europe and Latin America.

MAGDALENA LÓPEZ received her Ph.D. from the Department of Hispanic Languages and Literatures at the University of Pittsburgh in 2008. She is a postdoctoral research fellow at the Centro de Estudos Comparatistas, Universidade de Lisboa. She works on twentieth-century literature and cinema in the Caribbean region. Her book El otro de nuestra América: Imaginarios frente a Estados Unidos en la República Dominicana y Cuba, will be published by the Instituto Internacional de Literatura Iberoamericana in 2011.

CLAUDIA RADEL is an assistant professor in the Department of Environment and Society at Utah State University. She earned her Ph.D. in geography from Clark University in 2005 and her MPA in international development from Princeton University in 1995. Her research explores changing natural resource-based livelihood strategies for individuals, households, and communities in the rural global South, and she is interested particularly in how gender ideologies and practices intersect with these strategies. Her research interests also include the relationship between labor migration and environmental change. Her work appears in Gender, Place, and Culture, Journal of Latin American Geography, Regional Environmental Change, and other journals.

ELISA P. REIS is professor of political sociology at the Federal University of Rio de Janeiro, and chair of the Interdisciplinary Center for the Study of Inequality. She coordinated a comparative study on elite perceptions of poverty and inequality in five countries: Bangladesh, Brazil, Haiti, the Philippines, and South Africa. At the moment she is doing research on the changing patterns of interaction between the state and civil society, focusing on the performance of nongovernmental organizations in the implementation of public policies to reduce inequality.

STÉPHANIE ROUSSEAU is associate professor of sociology at Université Laval. She received her Ph.D. in political science from McGill University in 2004. She is the author of Women's Citizenship in Peru: The Paradoxes of Neopopulism in Latin America (Palgrave Macmillan, 2009). Her work has appeared in Latin American Politics and Society, Social Politics, International Studies in Gender, State and Society, and Estudios Feministas, among other publications. Her current research focuses on gender, ethnicity and women's movements in Peru and Bolivia.

CRISTÓBAL ROVIRA KALTWASSER is an Alexander von Humboldt-Foundation postdoctoral research fellow at the Social Science Research Center Berlin (Wissenschaftszentrum Berlin für Sozialforschung). He received his Ph.D.

in political science in 2008 from the Humboldt University of Berlin. He has previously worked for the Chilean Bureau of the UN Development Programme. He is currently finishing an edited volume with Cas Mudde on the ambiguous relationship between populism and democracy in Europe and the Americas. His research focuses on elites, populism, and historical sociology.

JAMES E. SANDERS is associate professor of history at Utah State University. His first book, Contentious Republicans: Popular Politics, Race, and Class in Nineteenth-Century Colombia, was published by Duke University Press in 2004. He has also published in Hispanic American Historical Review, Journal of World History, Journal of Women's History, and Journal of Latin American Cultural Studies. His current book project explores how nineteenth-century Latin Americans envisioned their role in the construction and development of democracy, republicanism, and modernity in the Atlantic world.

FRANCISCO SCARANO is professor of history at the University of Wisconsin–Madison. He conducts research on the history of the Caribbean regions in all periods and on a variety of topics, ranging from slavery, the plantation economy, and demographic history to race and racialization processes and the influence of racial imagery on nation building. He is the author most recently of Puerto Rico: Cinco siglos de historia (2007) and the edited volume (with Alfred McCoy) Colonial Crucible: Empire in the Making of the Modern American State (2009), and he is working on Jíbaro Masquerades: Peasants, Politics, and Identity in Puerto Rico and Its Diaspora (forthcoming).

GRAZIELLA MORAES DA SILVA is an associated researcher at the Interdisciplinary Center for the Study of Inequality, at the Federal University of Rio de Janeiro in Brazil. She received her Ph.D. in sociology from Harvard University (2010), with a dissertation comparing the experiences and perceptions of black professionals in Brazil and South Africa. Her current research interests include a comparison of elites in Brazil and South Africa, the interface of racial and national identifications in Latin America, and the development of civil society in Brazil.

TAMAR DIANA WILSON, research affiliate with the Department of Anthropology, University of Missouri, St. Louis, has coedited a special edition of Latin American Perspectives on the impacts of tourism in Latin America. Her Subsidizing Capitalism: Brickmakers on the U.S.-Mexico Border (State University of New York Press, 2005) explores the brickmaker niche in the informal economy, and her Women's Migration Networks in Mexico and Beyond (University of New Mexico Press, 2009) addresses Mexican women's internal and cross-border migration patterns.

CHRISTIAN ZLOLNISKI is associate professor of anthropology and Mexican American studies at the University of Texas at Arlington. His research focuses on the study of globalization and transnational labor migration in Mexico and the United States. He is the author of Janitors, Street Vendors and Activists: The Lives of Mexican Immigrants in Silicon Valley (University of California Press, 2006).