

Editorial

This issue of the Journal contains two new features — the publication of the successful manuscripts in the Student Manuscript Awards Competition and the introduction of a Brief Reports section.

It was pleasing to see the diversity and quality of manuscripts submitted to the Student Manuscript Competition. The Competition was truly international with awards being given to manuscripts authored in the United States, New Zealand and Australia. Congratulations to the award winners and thanks to Trevor Hawkins, University of Sydney and Herbert Biggs, Massey University for coordinating the Competition. Andrew Remenyi, of LaTrobe University, will coordinate the 1996 Competition (which is advertised in this issue).

The Brief Reports section is intended to provide authors with an opportunity to publish research or review material that are not full length articles but are still of interest to readers. This issue contains a 'brief report' by Steven Fullmer of the Rehabilitation Research and Training Center at West Virginia University on informative web sites containing disability-related information. With the increasing influence of the Internet on our lives, Dr. Fullmer provides rehabilitation practitioners with some interesting sites to browse and become hooked on 'surfing the net'.
