Famine Crimes in International Law

David Marcus 245

The author argues that international criminal law assigns individual responsibility to those who deliberately or recklessly create, prolong, or inflict faminogenic conditions. After demonstrating with three case studies how famines often arise out of gross human rights violations, the author defines two degrees of famine crimes corresponding to mental states of knowledge and recklessness and locates in existing international criminal law the elements of the two definitions. The article concludes with a proposal for formal codification of these crimes.

THE AMERICAN SOCIETY OF INTERNATIONAL LAW

The American Society of International Law was organized in 1906 “to foster the study of international law and to promote the establishment and maintenance of international relations on the basis of law and justice.” Society membership is open to all persons of any nationality and profession who are interested in its objectives. Dues are: regular, $150; special category, $100; new professional, $75; retired, $100; student, $25. Sustaining Memberships—contributing ($250) and patrons ($10,000)—are also available. Corporations may join ASIL as institutional members ($2,000). The Society is incorporated by Act of Congress approved September 20, 1950 (64 Stat. 869).
