

Modernization of the German Anti-Corruption Criminal Law: The Next Steps

By Sebastian Wolf*

“Despite many successes in the anti-corruption movement, [...] it must never be forgotten that both in political life and in the economic sphere there are powerful factors prompting and encouraging corrupt practices.”<sup>1</sup>

A. Introduction

Shortly after the publication of our overview of necessary amendments to the German anti-corruption criminal law in the light of requirements of international anti-corruption instruments,<sup>2</sup> the German Federal Ministry of Justice issued a Referentenentwurf (first governmental draft) of a Zweites Gesetz zur Bekämpfung der Korruption (Second Anti-Corruption Act).<sup>3</sup> After several years of legislative inactivity, the new law shall implement binding international anti-corruption provisions of the Council of Europe Criminal Law Convention on Corruption, the Additional Protocol to the Criminal Law Convention on Corruption, the EU Framework Decision on Combating Corruption in the Private Sector, and the UN Convention against Corruption.<sup>4</sup> This short comment firstly compares the present

---

* The author is Senior Researcher at the German Research Institute for Public Administration Speyer (GRIP). Email: swolf@foev-speyer.de. A German version of this paper will be published as: Sebastian Wolf, Internationalisierung des Antikorruptionsstrafrechts: Kritische Analyse zum Zweiten Korruptionsbekämpfungsgesetz, 40 ZEITSCHRIFT FÜR RECHTSPOLITIK (forthcoming 2007). This paper resulted from the GRIP research project “The Contribution of Supranational and International Organizations to the Fight Against Corruption in the Member States: Progress and Obstacles.” (<http://www.foev-speyer.de/Korruption/>).

<sup>1</sup> Terry Davis, Secretary General of the Council of Europe, 31st Group of States Against Corruption Plenary (December 6, 2006).

<sup>2</sup> Sebastian Wolf, Modernization of the German Anti-Corruption Criminal Law by International Legal Provisions, 7 GERMAN LAW JOURNAL 785 (2006).

<sup>3</sup> Bundesministerium der Justiz (Federal Ministry of Justice), Entwurf eines Zweiten Gesetzes zur Bekämpfung der Korruption (Second Anti-Corruption Act), Sept. 19, 2006 (on file with the author).

<sup>4</sup> See Wolf, supra note 2, at 790-792 for references and requirements resulting from these international instruments.

law to the draft and then provides a critical analysis. The last section will deal with corruption involving members of parliament, a subject not covered by the draft.

B. Present Anti-corruption Criminal Law and the Draft's Suggested Modifications - A Short Overview

German criminal law currently deals with bribery involving public officials in the following way:<sup>5</sup>

[see figure on next page]

---

<sup>5</sup> An English translation of the Strafgesetzbuch (StGB - Penal Code) is available at <http://www.iuscomp.org/gla>. In the following table, EUBestG means EU-Bestechungsgesetz (EU-Anti-Corruption Act), IntBestG stands for Gesetz zur Bekämpfung Internationaler Bestechung (Act Against International Corruption), and IStGHGG means Gesetz über die Gleichstellung der Richter und Bediensteten des Internationalen Strafgerichtshofes (Act for Equalization of Judges and Officials of the International Criminal Court). See Wolf, supra note 2, at 786-787 for references.

	German public officials	Public officials of other EU Member States	Other foreign officials	Officials of the EU institutions	Officials of International Organizations	Officials of the International Criminal Court
Acceptance of advantages for future action (no breach of duties)	Sect. 331 StGB	–	–	–	–	Art. 2 Sect. 2 No. 2 IStGHGG plus Sect. 331 StGB
Acceptance of advantages for past action (no breach of duties)	Sect. 331 StGB	–	–	–	–	–
Passive bribery for future action (breach of duties)	Sect. 332 StGB	Art. 2 Sect. 1 I No. 2a) EUBestG plus Sect. 332 StGB	–	Art. 2 Sect. 1 I No. 2b) EUBestG plus Sect. 332 StGB	–	Art. 2 Sect. 2 No. 2 IStGHGG plus Sect. 332 StGB
Passive bribery for past action (breach of duties)	Sect. 332 StGB	–	–	–	–	–
Giving of advantages for future action (no breach of duties)	Sect. 333 StGB	–	–	–	–	Art. 2 Sect. 2 No. 2 IStGHGG plus Sect. 333 StGB
Giving of advantages for past action (no breach of duties)	Sect. 333 StGB	–	–	–	–	–
Active bribery for future action (breach of duties)	Sect. 334 StGB	Art. 2 Sect. 1 I No. 2a) EUBestG plus Sect. 334 StGB	Art. 2 Sect. 1 No. 2a) IntBestG <sup>6</sup>	Art. 2 Sect. 1 I No. 2b) EUBestG plus Sect. 334 StGB	Art. 2 Sect. 1 No. 2c) IntBestG <sup>6</sup>	Art. 2 Sect. 2 No. 2 IStGHGG plus Sect. 334 StGB
Active bribery for past action (breach of duties)	Sect. 334 StGB	–	–	–	–	–

<sup>6</sup> Plus Sect. 334 Strafgesetzbuch [StGB] (Penal Code), restricted to bribery in international business transactions.

The most important modification of the present law suggested by the Federal Ministry of Justice's draft is the introduction of a new Sect. 335a Strafgesetzbuch (StGB - German Penal Code) on "Ausländische und internationale Bedienstete" (Foreign and international officials). Moreover, Sect. 332 and 334 StGB shall also apply to Europäische Amtsträger (Officials of the EU institutions). The governmental proposals can be summarized as follows:

	German public officials	Foreign and international officials	Officials of the EU institutions	Officials of the International Criminal Court
Acceptance of advantages for future action (no breach of duties)	Sect. 331 StGB	-	-	Sect. 335a II No. 2 StGB plus Sect. 331 StGB
Acceptance of advantages for past action (no breach of duties)	Sect. 331 StGB	-	-	-
Passive bribery for future action (breach of duties)	Sect. 332 StGB	Sect. 335a I No. 2a and b) StGB plus Sect. 332 StGB	Sect. 332 StGB	Sect. 335a I No. 2b) StGB plus Sect. 332 StGB
Passive bribery for past action (breach of duties)	Sect. 332 StGB	-	Sect. 332 StGB	-
Giving of advantages for future action (no breach of duties)	Sect. 333 StGB	-	-	Sect. 335a II No. 2 StGB plus Sect. 333 StGB
Giving of advantages for past action (no breach of duties)	Sect. 333 StGB	-	-	-
Active bribery for future action (breach of duties)	Sect. 334 StGB	Sect. 335a I No. 2a and b) StGB plus Sect. 334 StGB	Sect. 334 StGB	Sect. 335a I No. 2b) StGB plus Sect. 334 StGB
Active bribery for past action (breach of duties)	Sect. 334 StGB	-	Sect. 334 StGB	-

As to corruption in the private sector, the present law only applies to active and passive bribery that distorts or may distort business competition. The Federal Ministry of Justice's draft extends Sect. 299 StGB to corrupt practices that involve a breach of duties beyond business competition.

C. Critical Analysis of the Draft

In the past, the German parliament mostly implemented criminal law requirements of international anti-corruption instruments by means of Nebengesetzen (auxiliary laws). This approach of bypassing the StGB has been criticized many times before.<sup>7</sup> The draft suggests to include the central provisions of the EU-Bestechungsgesetz (EUBestG - EU-Anti-Corruption Act), the Gesetz zur Bekämpfung internationaler Bestechung (IntBestG - Act Against International Corruption), and the Gesetz über die Gleichstellung der Richter und Bediensteten des Internationalen Strafgerichtshofes (IStGHGG - Act for Equalization of Judges and Officials of the International Criminal Court) into the StGB to make the whole anti-corruption criminal legislation more accessible.<sup>8</sup> This is certainly a good proposal. The EUBestG would be reduced to a mere approval of the First Protocol to the Convention on the Protection of the European Communities' Financial Interests, and the IStGHGG could be repealed.

On the other hand, it is not convincing that Art. 2 Sect. 2 IntBestG on active bribery involving foreign and international parliamentarians shall not be altered. The governmental draft does not deal with corruption involving members of parliament since the Bundestag (Federal Parliament) is working on a specific draft,<sup>9</sup> but a mere inclusion of the unaltered provision into either Sect. 335a StGB on foreign and international officials or Sect. 108e StGB on members of parliament would make it much more accessible. It does not seem to make sense that the Federal Ministry of Justice excluded this provision from its strategy to make the anti-corruption legislation more accessible, especially since it is not foreseeable when the Bundestag will finally come up with its draft. Moreover, integrating Art. 2 Sect. 2 IntBestG as soon as possible in the StGB would make it even more obvious that current anti-bribery provisions dealing with German parliamentarians are much weaker than those concerning members of foreign assemblies and assemblies of international organizations. The latter rules do not confine the criminal offense to buying or

---

<sup>7</sup> See Fernando Sanchez-Hermosilla, Rechtspolitik zur Korruptionsbekämpfung, 57 KRIMINALISTIK 74, 77 (2003), and MANFRED MÖHRENSCHLAGER, Die Bekämpfung der Korruption auf internationaler Ebene, in KORRUPTION IN BRASILIEN UND DEUTSCHLAND 8, 25 (Wolf Paul ed., 2002).

<sup>8</sup> See Bundesministerium der Justiz, supra note 3, at 16.

<sup>9</sup> See Bundesministerium der Justiz, supra note 3, at 14-15, and infra Part D.

selling a vote.<sup>10</sup> The Federal Ministry of Justice's approach of not touching Art. 2 Sect. 2 IntBestG also means that the criminal offense of bribery involving foreign and international parliamentarians is likely to stay restricted to corruption in international business transactions, whereas the draft suggests to abolish this restriction with regard to foreign and international officials.

There are currently four groups of officials to which different anti-corruption criminal provisions apply: (1) German public officials, (2) public officials of other EU member states and officials of the EU institutions, (3) officials of the International Criminal Court, and (4) other foreign and international officials.<sup>11</sup> In the light of these rather unsystematic regulatory differences, scholars have suggested to harmonize the separate anti-corruption criminal offenses.<sup>12</sup> The governmental draft rightly abolishes the differentiation between officials of EU member states and other foreign officials. There shall be uniform rules on bribery involving foreign and international officials, and the restriction of the criminal offense to international business transactions shall be eliminated. It is also worthy of mention that with regard to passive bribery involving foreign and international officials, the draft goes beyond the international minimum requirements. In the past, the Bundestag mostly confined its implementation legislation to the minimum requirements of the respective international anti-corruption instruments.

The draft rightly equates officials of the EU institutions with German public officials regarding active and passive bribery (Sect. 332 and 334 StGB). This means an extension of the present legislation concerning European officials since the accepting or giving of advantages for a past breach of duties is currently not penalized. Once again, the draft goes beyond the international minimum requirements. Nevertheless, compared to the provisions on officials of the International Criminal Court, these improvements seem suboptimal. With regard to officials of the ICC, the present law even penalizes acceptance or giving of advantages for future action without a breach of duties. The Federal Ministry of Justice justified its proposal to slightly extend the provisions concerning European officials by highlighting Germany's advanced integration into the EU.<sup>13</sup> But the country's integration into the EU is obviously much deeper than into the slowly

---

<sup>10</sup> This has been criticized many times before: See Anne van Aaken, Genügt das deutsche Recht den Anforderungen an die VN-Konvention gegen Korruption?, 65 ZEITSCHRIFT FÜR AUSLÄNDISCHES ÖFFENTLICHES RECHT UND VÖLKERRECHT 407, 429 (2005), and Hans Herbert von Arnim, Der gekaufte Abgeordnete – Nebeneinkünfte und Korruptionsproblematik, 25 NEUE ZEITSCHRIFT FÜR VERWALTUNGSRECHT 249, 252 (2006).

<sup>11</sup> See supra Part B, Table 1.

<sup>12</sup> See Sanchez-Hermosilla, supra note 7, at 77, and Wolf, supra note 2, at 792.

<sup>13</sup> See Bundesministerium der Justiz, supra note 3, at 30.

emerging international criminal law regime.<sup>14</sup> Thus, despite the above mentioned improvements, the draft does not reduce the number of groups of officials to which different anti-corruption criminal provisions apply: There still shall be four groups, albeit differently defined.<sup>15</sup>

The current criminal offense of corruption in the private sector (Sect. 299 StGB) primarily protects free business competition.<sup>16</sup> However, a comparative view shows that most states prefer to protect individual companies by focussing on a breach of duties within a principal-agent relationship.<sup>17</sup> The draft rightly suggests to extend the present German law to corrupt practices that involve a breach of duties by employees beyond business competition (new Sect. 299 I No. 2 and II No. 2 StGB). Unfortunately, the draft does not extend the criminal offense to business owners. Business owners are principals and therefore cannot commit a breach of duties, but bribery involving business owners may distort competition.<sup>18</sup>

D. Corruption Involving Members of Parliament

The criminal offense of bribery involving members of parliament (Sect. 108e StGB) is currently limited to buying or selling a vote in the plenary or the committees. This provision does not meet international requirements any more<sup>19</sup> and has been criticized as symbolic legislation.<sup>20</sup> In its draft, the Federal Ministry of Justice does not deal with corruption involving German, foreign, and international parliamentarians since the Bundestag intends to develop a specific bill.<sup>21</sup> However, the members of parliament have to decide on their own account in this case and did

---

<sup>14</sup> See Bernd Schünemann, Das Strafrecht im Zeichen der Globalisierung, 150 GOLDAMMER'S ARCHIV FÜR STRAFRECHT 299 (2003) for a harsh critique of the present criminal law regime.

<sup>15</sup> See supra Part B, Table 2.

<sup>16</sup> See WOLFGANG WINKELBAUER, Ketzerische Gedanken zum Tatbestand der Angestelltenbestechlichkeit (§ 299 Abs. 1 StGB), in Festschrift für Ulrich Weber, 385, 386 (Bernd Heinrich et al., eds., 2004), and HERBERT TRÖNDLE & THOMAS FISCHER, STRAFGESETZBUCH, § 299, para. 2 (2006).

<sup>17</sup> See JOACHIM VOGEL, Wirtschaftskorruption und Strafrecht – ein Beitrag zu Regelungsmodellen im Wirtschaftsstrafrecht, in Festschrift für Ulrich Weber 395, 398 (Bernd Heinrich et al., eds., 2004).

<sup>18</sup> See TRÖNDLE & FISCHER, supra note 16, at § 299, para. 10a, and Vogel, supra note 17, at 405.

<sup>19</sup> See van Aaken, supra note 10, at 429.

<sup>20</sup> See von Arnim, supra note 10, at 252.

<sup>21</sup> See Joachim Stünker, Speech to the Bundestag on September 5, 2006, MINUTES OF PLENARY PROCEEDINGS No. 16/45, at 4451.

not show much willingness to tackle the problem in the past.<sup>22</sup> Thus, even if the Bundestag quickly adopted the governmental draft, the ratification and implementation of anti-corruption instruments signed by Germany up to seven years ago might be further delayed.

The Bundesregierung (Federal Government) should be more courageous and use its agenda-setter role to put the Bundestag under pressure by including in its draft provisions to implement international requirements regarding corruption involving members of parliament. In their vaguely announced bill, German parliamentarians are likely not to go beyond the international minimum requirements anyway. This makes it even easier for the Federal Ministry of Justice to supplement its draft, e. g. by taking Art. 2 Sect. 2 IntBestG as a model.<sup>23</sup> One should remember that the IntBestG, which introduced, inter alia, the criminal offense of active bribery of German parliamentarians as members of assemblies of international organizations, was drafted by the Federal Government. It was quickly adopted by the Bundestag in 1998.

---

<sup>22</sup> See Hans Herbert von Arnim, Regina Heiny & Stefan Ittner, Korruption. Begriff, Bekämpfungs- und Forschungslücken, GRIP DISCUSSION PAPER No. 33, 33-34 (2006), available at http://www.foev-speyer.de/publikationen/pubdb.asp?reihen\_id=3.

<sup>23</sup> See MANFRED MÖHRENSCHLAGER, Die Struktur des Straftatbestandes der Abgeordnetenbestechung auf dem Prüfstand – Historisches und Künftiges, in Festschrift für Ulrich Weber 217, 231 (Bernd Heinrich et al., eds., 2004).