

DEATH IS A SOCIAL DISEASE

Public Health & Political Economy in Early Industrial France

by William Coleman

In examining the interrelations between public health and political economy, William Coleman traces in detail the unexpected consequences of an ideology, whether it be practised consciously or unconsciously, and shows the importance to medicine of a sharply defined world view which would seem to reach beyond the special concerns of the medical profession.

Journal of the History of Biology

Editor:

EVERETT MENDELSON, Harvard University

Associate Editor:

SHIRLEY A. ROE, Harvard University

The Journal of the History of Biology has become highly regarded over the years for the special attention it has focused upon the history of the biological sciences. Currents in twentieth-century history continue to be emphasized within its pages yet formative events and theories of the nineteenth century and earlier times are also given a welcome forum. Now published three times each year, the journal serves both the working biologist who seeks a better understanding of the history and philosophical underpinnings of his profession, and the historian of biology who desires contact with his colleagues in the laboratory. Book reviews appear in every issue, in 'The J.H.B. Bookshelf'.

A Representative Selection of Some Recent Articles

Frank J. Sulloway: Darwin and his Finches: The Evolution of a Legend. Michael Boylan: The Digestive and 'Circulatory' Systems in Aristotle's Biology. Paul L. Farber: The Transformation of Natural History in the Nineteenth Century. John Beatty: What's In a Word? Coming to Terms in the Darwinian Revolution. C. U. M. Smith: Evolution and the Problem of Mind: Part II. John Hughlings Jackson, Mario A. Di Gregorio: The Dinosaur Connection: A Reinterpretation of T. H. Huxley's Evolutionary View.
