CONTRIBUTORS

PETER DEWEES works as a natural resource management specialist in the Eastern Africa Agriculture and Environment Operations Division of the World Bank in Washington, D.C. For six years he worked in Kenya, at the University of Nairobi and elsewhere; his D.Phil. in forestry and economics is from Oxford.

ELIZABETH FRANCIS is a lecturer in sociology at the University of Essex. She carried out research into agrarian change in western Kenya for her doctoral thesis. She is researching the impact of the new South African government's plans for land reform and rural development.

LESLIE GRAY is a Ph.D. candidate in the Department of Geography at the University of Illinois. She has worked on issues of gender, agricultural practice and famine in Sudan. Current research involves a field project on the physical and social dynamics of land degradation in western Burkina Faso.

TIM KELSALL is a research student in the Department of Political Studies at the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London. His dissertation is a village-level study of politics and development in the context of multi-partyism and NGO service provision. He begins fieldwork in Kilimanjaro Region, Tanzania, in 1996.

MICHAEL KEVANE is an economist at the Harvard Academy for International and Area Studies. He has published articles on agrarian structure, local markets and agricultural practices in Sudan. Current work includes an investigation of the gendered nature of local factor markets in western Burkina Faso.

JOHN McCALL teaches socio-cultural anthropology at Southern Illinois University, Carbondale. His field research, carried out in Ohafia between 1989 and 1991, focused on indigenous representations of the past and the aesthetics of performance.

BIRGIT MEYER studied cultural anthropology at the University of Amsterdam. She is affiliated to the Amsterdam School for Social Science Research. She is completing her dissertation on the evolution of local Christianity among the Ewe in Ghana. Recently she has published two articles on syncretism.

PARKER SHIPTON is Associate Professor of Anthropology at Boston University and Faculty Associate at the Harvard Institute for International Development. In 1989 he published Bitter Money, and he is now finishing a two-volume study of entrustment and obligation in western Kenya.
