Exploring the Frontiers of Contemporary Theology

FAITH AND IDEOLOGIES

Vol. 1 of Jesus of Nazareth Yesterday and Today

by Juan Luis Segundo, S.J.

In his monumental Jesus of Nazareth Yesterday and Today, Juan Luis Segundo attempts to place the person and message of Jesus before us all, believer and unbeliever alike. He shakes off the christological dust of centuries so that we can hear the words that Jesus spoke.

"Faith and Ideologies continues to develop the key concepts that Segundo had previously analyzed in The Liberation of Theology. The book provides a bridge to his forthcoming Christology and is must reading for those exploring the frontiers of contemporary theology."

PLANETARY THEOLOGY

by Tissa Balasuriya

We hear calls from every quarter today that theology must be "contextualized," that is, that it must grow out of and speak to the specific experiences of particular groups. But, argues Balasuriya, the context for any adequate theology must be nothing less than the whole planet. Here he lays out the elements for such a "planetary theology."

WHAT IS RELIGION?

by Rubem Alves

What is the meaning of religion in a world come of age, in a world in which some claim that God is dead? In this profound and lyric essay a Brazilian theologian addresses this question. His carefully wrought work will be valuable for classroom use in introductory courses on religion and in study groups; it will be welcomed by theology students and all thoughtful and probing Christians.

"What is Religion? is an enchantingly written almost poetic masterpiece which is accessible to a wide readership."

CORRECT IDEAS DON'T FALL FROM THE SKIES

Elements for an Inductive Theology

by Georges Casalis

An introduction to theological method in which Casalis advocates a militant theology rooted in a commitment to social justice. He states "theology cannot be neutral; the more it claims to be, the less it actually is." He offers a major study for all students of theology.

The Journal of the College Theology Society

A journal exploring developments in Catholic theology, the total Christian tradition, human religious experience, and the concerns of creative teaching from the college and university environment.

We begin our second decade with a varied spread of topics including feminism, christology, Judaism, ethics, religious education, "religion," and spiritual direction—indicative of the wide range of issues we hope to explore in our next ten years.

Geoffrey Lilburne relates trinitarian christology to the soteriological concerns of feminist theology in its "second stage" of constructive dialogue. Against the historical background of scripture and Talmud, Denise Lardner Carmody sketches modern Jewish views of women. From his experience of teaching ethics, Edward Vacek examines four forms of subjectivism, and suggests their contributions to objective ethics. Mary Boys's topic is religious education, and she focuses on the distinct ways theology and religious studies can contribute to it. Stephen Casey presents a theological critique of social scientific definitions of religion. Sandra Schneiders continues our contemporary survey series in her consideration of recent literature on spiritual direction.

Our Creative Teaching series on mainstreaming feminist studies focuses on historical and systematic areas in theology. Rosemary Rader suggests resources and strategies in the teaching of early Christian history, and Pauline Turner and Bernard Cooke do the same for topics in systematics. Our Open forum and Reader Response section is revived by Leonard Weber's reflections on the task facing the American Bishops as they prepare a pastoral letter on the United States economy. The Review Symposium in this issue features In Memory of Her, the work of Horizons Associate Editor Elisabeth Schüssler-Fiorenza. She responds to the reviews of PHEME PERKINS, JOHN KOENIG, ROSEMARY RADFORD RUETHER, and BEVERLY HARRISON. Finally, to bring the issue to its accustomed end, Book Review Editor Joann Wolski Conn presents reviews of sixty-eight books spread across the spectrum of theological and religious studies.
