Confidential U.S. State Department Central Files
CHINA: INTERNAL AFFAIRS, 1930-1939

Covering the internal affairs of China from 1930 through 1939, the State Department's Central Files are the definitive source of American diplomatic reporting on the political, social, and economic developments in China during the period which was marked both by increasingly bitter civil war between Kuomintang and Communist factions and by military intervention by Japan. Although scholars have used these files at the National Archives for more than a decade, the files have never been published in any format until now. By making available over 100,000 pages of special reports, confidential correspondence, interviews, minutes of meetings, and translated documents, this new collection opens broad avenues of research.

The voluminous political files are particularly valuable in view of the critical years of Chinese history which they document. Political and military developments, as well as social and economic ones, were observed and reported by American diplomatic personnel throughout China, both at the U.S. embassy and at consulates (Amoy, Canton, Chefoo, Foochow, Hankow, Harbin, Mukden, Nanking, Shanghai, Swatow, Tientsin, Tsinan, Tsingtao and Yunnanfu). These reports are the largest component of the Central Files. Additionally, there are reports from the State Department's Division of Far Eastern Affairs, as well as reports on China from such other U.S. diplomatic posts as Tokyo, Saigon, Hanoi, Calcutta, London, Paris, Berlin, and Moscow. Now available in a convenient microfilm edition, the State Department's Central Files on Chinese internal affairs will be counted among the most useful research collections in any library. Filmed from the original documents in the National Archives, our edition contains all of the important files; only files of little or no historical value (such as those dealing with claims of U.S. citizens) have been omitted.

Confidential U.S. State Department Central Files. China: Internal Affairs, 1930-1939.
35mm microfilm (105 reels) with printed guide.

Please note: We will publish the files for 1940-1949 in January 1985. Our complete catalogue is available upon request.

The "publication" of the State Department's Confidential Central Files on China's internal affairs is a monumental event which adds new dimensions to the study of China in the 1930s. Used together with Chinese Nationalist and Communist materials, as well as Japanese, Russian, British, German, and French sources (when available), the availability of these Central Files could open a new era of intensive multi-archival research on China. A thorough re-examination of Chinese history in the 1930s is in order.

—Dr. Immanuel C.Y. Hsu

Professor of History

University of California, Santa Barbara

Now available outside the National Archives for the first time, these records are indispensable for professors and students who are interested in China during the pivotal decade of the 1930s. It will be a boon to researchers to have access to the State Department's voluminous files in one convenient microfilm collection.

—Dr. Kenneth E. Folsom

Associate Professor of History

University of Maryland

While doing research on domestic Chinese politics of the 1920s, I found the State Department Central Files, located in the National Archives, to be a rich and illuminating source of data and analyses. Now it is good news that the files for the 1930s are available on microfilm. The quality of the reporting by the "China hands" of the Foreign Service was first-rate, and scholars should take advantage of these files through their libraries.

Ford Professor of Political Science
