INDIA AND PAKISTAN

A General and Regional Geography

O. H. K. SPATE, M.A., Ph.D.

Professor of Geography in the Australian National University, Canberra

With a Chapter on Ceylon by B. H. FARMER

This book, probably the most comprehensive modern treatment of the subject in any language, contains much material unfamiliar to western geographers, with full documentation designed to suggest the wealth of untouched material for comparative studies offered by the Indian sub-continent, and 160 maps, for the most part specially compiled.

In Part I, The Land, stress is laid on the numerous problems of physical geography which await research. Part II, The People, provides a synopsis of the social complexities of the sub-continent, so far as these are relevant to geographical understanding. Part III, The Economy, includes two long chapters on agrarian and industrial problems, with a survey of current development programmes. Over half the book is devoted to detailed regional description (Part IV, The Face of the Land); special attention is paid to the fascinating settlement geography, both urban and rural.

With a halfstone frontispiece, 2 folding and 158 text maps
