The Ounce of Prevention

PNEUMONIA can often be prevented by the prompt and energetic treatment of bronchitis and influenza.

Notwithstanding the satisfactory results obtained by modern therapeutics and, in spite of all progress, mortality is still high. In a great number of cases pneumonia is the result of bronchitis, or of influenza, or, even, of a slight infection of the upper respiratory tract.

Antiphlogistine Dressing, applied at the onset, relieves the congestion, stimulates the superficial circulation, favours phagocytosis and, by re-establishing a normal circulation in the bronchi and alveoli, will help to prevent pneumonia from following an attack of bronchitis or of influenza.
