International Journal for the History of Scientific Ideas

NEW

ISSN 1792-2593

Editors:

Efthymios Nicolaidis (National Hellenic Research Foundation, Greece)
Constantine Skordoulis (University of Athens, Greece)

The new journal Almagest considers the history of science both as a history of ideas and as an activity that takes place in an institutional and social context. In discussing the history of scientific ideas, the journal addresses the philosophical assumptions underpinning the ideas as well as the scientific developments themselves;

it also addresses the influence of the historical context on these ideas. One of the defining features of the journal's approach to the history of science is the belief that the history of scientific ideas, of research priorities, of conceptualizations of nature, and of the various external factors that are associated with scientific discoveries are deeply related to History, generally construed, and to cultural and socio-economic parameters. Following this approach, the journal invites papers on the history of scientific ideas in specific regions or related to a specific cultural context (for example, papers on science and religion). It also invites papers on the relations of scientific ideas to the material civilization, in particular to scientific instruments. It is a firm belief of the editorial board that history of science can contribute substantially to the scientific education of both students and the general public, especially at a time when debates over "intelligent design" are raising major questions not only over what counts as science but also on what ought to be available to students in their school curricula. The journal, therefore, invites also papers on the utilization of history of science in science education.

History of Science

FROM CHICAGO

Between Raphael and Galileo

Mutio Oddi and the Mathematical Culture of Late Renaissance Italy

Alexander Marr

“Through a fine-grained reconstruction of the daily practices of Mutio Oddi and his many friends, students, correspondents, and employers, Alexander Marr adds much-needed texture to our map of mathematical networks in early modern Italy, the design and trade of instruments, the circulation of books and paintings about them, and the teaching of mathematics.”

—Mario Biagioli, University of California, Davis

Histories of Scientific Observation

Edited by Lorraine Daston
and Elizabeth Lunbeck

“A remarkable and ambitious volume which lays out observation as a distinctive approach to knowledge about the natural and human world. . . . This exciting collection is far more than the sum of its parts.”—Katharine Anderson, York University

Geographies of Nineteenth-Century Science

Edited by David N. Livingstone and Charles W. J. Withers

“The first hesitant efforts to write the geography of science addressed a point of principle: could one intelligibly say that apparently universal knowledge bore the marks of the particular places in which it was made and justified? About a quarter of a century later, the field has matured, and this more confident collection largely sets aside matters of philosophical principle in favor of a series of rich and resonant empirical inquiries about how nineteenth-century scientific knowledge traveled.”—Steven Shapin, author of The Scientific Life

Wrestling with Nature

From Omens to Science

Edited by Peter Harrison, Ronald L. Numbers,
Michael H. Shank

“A refreshing reflection on that old word, ‘science,’ that has risen to mean so much. Wrestling with Nature is indispensable for clarifying the many different things people throughout history meant when they tried to make sense of nature and of themselves.”—Pietro Corsi, University of Oxford
