

Acknowledgements

The manuscript of Anthony Daffy's Account Book is held in the National Archives, Kew, within the Chancery: Unknown Masters' Exhibits (C 114/59). We are grateful to the National Archives for permission to produce this edition and the pictures of the text. The authors would like to acknowledge the generous support of the Wellcome Trust in the production of this edition. The help of the Trust came in two stages. The original discovery and first study of the Account Book formed part of Patrick Wallis's doctoral research, supported by a Wellcome Doctoral Studentship. The Trust later provided an additional research grant that permitted the employment of David Haycock to transcribe the text and carry out further research on the business network. This latter grant was held at the University of Nottingham, and both authors would like to thank the Institute for the Study of Genetics, Biorisks and Society for hosting the study. The final preparation of the manuscript has occurred in the congenial atmosphere of the LSE, and has coincided with the start of a broader project by David Haycock on proprietary medicines, again supported by the Wellcome Trust. A number of other scholars have helped greatly in the project, providing both broader perspectives or additional information with great generosity. The authors would particularly like to thank Hal Cook, Tony Corley, Leslie Cram, Perry Gauci, David Gentilcore, Norm Gevitz, Jeremy Kemp, Elaine Leong, Margaret Pelling, Anne Stobart, and Layinka Swinburne. Likewise, a number of audiences at Leicester, Birmingham, the LSE, and the Business History Society Conference have suffered papers based on this research with much patience. Their comments contributed greatly. The preparation of the text has benefited incalculably from the close eye and immense patience of Caroline Tonson-Rye. We would also like to thank Janet Dudley for compiling the index.